The alternate gold jersey is reintroduced to the team's lineup in 2013 with slight modifications, following a surprise appearance in 2011 during a Brewers "Gold-Out" promotion, in which fans were encouraged to wear gold to the park while the team wore gold on the field (this game is included in the "Special Events" section ahead). The uniforms are something less than bright yellow—under the lights, they appear mustard-colored. The lettering is elaborate and multi-layered: navy/white with metallic gold/navy 3D drop shadow, totaling four colors. It is difficult to stitch and is described as being "thick as cardboard" when completed. A white-bordered sleeve patch matches the one found on the navy jerseys. The gold jersey, which is worn both at home and on the road, enjoys a short three-year run.

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, made of Cool Base fabric but enhanced with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys feature mesh side panels that run the full length of the torso, along with an additional mesh panel on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic claims is 10–20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck becomes a rubberized patch—called CFX by Majestic—and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from that of earlier Cool Base jerseys.

A major change for 2016: while the alternate road navy jersey transitions to the Flex Base template (along with all of the team's other jerseys), several other updates are introduced as well. The fabric is a noticeably brighter shade of blue than the earlier navy, and the lightweight twill replaces its metallic gold drop shadow with a version made of standard gold twill. The sleeve patch changes to the Brewers' ball-in-glove alternate logo, and the sleeve-end trim changes from metallic gold braid to solid "retro" gold. This jersey quickly becomes the Brewers' preferred road selection.

In time for the Brewers' 50th anniversary as Milwaukee's team, the Brew Crew unveils a complete redesign of their suite of uniforms. The home jersey is now cream-colored and built on Nike's version of the former Majestic Flex Base template, with all lettering presented in a blue/yellow color scheme. The front features a new wordmark in a vertically arched serif font, accompanied by a matching custom-font number on the left side. Player names appear on the back in the same font, radially arched, above custom-font back numbers. Sleeve ends are adorned with wide blue/yellow/blue sewn-in trim, and a new navy, royal blue, and yellow baseball logo—with stalks of wheat subbing in for stitches—is sewn to the left sleeve. During the inaugural season of this set, the team's 50th anniversary patch appears on the right sleeve. In 2021, it is replaced by the Hank Aaron memorial patch.

In time for the Brewers' 50th anniversary as Milwaukee's team, the Brew Crew unveils a complete redesign of their uniforms. The home alternate jersey revives the team's nostalgic pinstripe history, echoing the club's 1980s glory. Built on Nike's version of Majestic's Flex Base template, this jersey is identical in design elements to the home jersey but applied to a white jersey with blue pinstripes and no sleeve trim. All lettering is again in blue/yellow. The front features the new wordmark in a vertically arched serif font, paired with a matching custom-font number on the left side. The new-for-2020 set's alternate road blue jersey is sewn using Nike's version of the former Majestic Flex Base template. All lettering appears in yellow, outlined in a blue that matches the color of the jersey fabric. The front features a new script "Milwaukee" wordmark, distinct from the standard road jersey, rendered in an angular cursive style. Player names and numbers appear on the back in the same custom font used across the other new jerseys, also in the same yellow and blue color combination as the front lettering. The sleeves are adorned with narrow yellow trim just above the sleeve ends, and the same trim traces the placket and collar. The left sleeve features a new patch shaped like the state of Wisconsin, with a blue "M" over a gold brickwork pattern and a baseball roughly indicating Milwaukee's location. 2022-2023 City Connect

Below: The People's Flag of Milwaukee—designed by Robert Lenz—which served as the inspiration for the color scheme used in the Brewers' City Connect uniforms.

Milwaukee's entry into the City Connect series draws upon the team's past and present identities. The navy, powder blue, and yellow color scheme is inspired by the People's Flag of Milwaukee—a design known as "Sunrise Over the Lake" by Robert Lenz, which won a 2016 contest and has since gained widespread popularity across the city. The powder blue also pays tribute to the Brewers' 1980s road uniforms, as does the ball-in-glove patch (worn on the left sleeve in 2022 only). For the first time, the team's unofficial nickname, "Brew Crew," appears on the front of the jersey in yellow/navy—with a 3D drop shadow—in a script that echoes the team's current road jersey font. The back of the jersey features the Brewers' standard name and number font, rendered in navy/yellow.A wide yellow braid encircles the neck opening, while yellow/white braid decorates the sleeve ends—an element the team says "represents a beer's foam head." The Brewers also claim that Wisconsinites "wait all year to fire up the grill," and they honor this tradition with a sleeve patch depicting a base-ball-shaped barbecue grill, complete with red stitches and support legs in the shape of an "M." This patch appears on the right sleeve in 2022 and is worn on different sleeves in 2023 based on player handedness. Finally, a small embroidered patch is sewn above the left-front jock tag, combining "MKE" (Milwaukee's airport code) with "414" (the city's area code).

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolls back some—but not all—of these changes for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Brewers home jersey introduced only four seasons before. For most teams, the most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller and arching the name lettering more prominently. The Brewers' 2020 redesign already used slightly smaller back lettering than most teams, so the 2024 difference is less pronounced, aside from the more prominent NOB arc Sleeve-end trim is also now sewn into the end of the sleeves rather than sewn on top of it. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so placket trim appears closer together than before, and the Brewers lettering now breaks across the "W" over the placket. It is unclear if the team opts for perforated numbering, more research is required.

2024-2025 City Connect

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Brewers' popular City Connect jersey introduced only two seasons prior. For most teams, the most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller and arching the name lettering more prominently. The Brewers City Connect actually used back lettering that was slightly smaller than other teams, so the difference is not as pronounced in 2024, aside from the NOB arc. Sleeve-end trim was sewn in on the Flex Base version of this style, and it is once again, however, the scale of that trim is now smaller than it had been before. Neck trim, on the other hand, was sewn on before and is now sewn into the collar, though it appears about the same size. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the Brew Crew lettering, which is smaller than before, breaks across the placket slightly differently. The Brewers use perforated numbers on this version of the jersey. Carryover City Connect jerseys are not updated in 2025, despite changes to the rest of the uniform set.

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025. The Brewers, for their part, have always used a smaller name font on this generation of jerseys, so the change back is more apparent on the arc of the name rather than the size. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. The 2025 version of this jersey includes the Bob Uecker memorial patch above the team patch. It also features the new-for-2025 white Nike jock tag—an element used on only a handful of jerseys league-wide.

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. This makes the Brewers’ sleeve-end trim appear narrower in 2025. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. Like other 2025 jerseys, gray jerseys also have back names and numbers enlarged, in most cases reverting to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. The Brewers, for their part, have always used a smaller name font on this generation of jerseys, so the change back is more apparent on the arc of the name rather than the size. Like all other teams in Major League Baseball, the Brewers adopt the new, lighter-weight Cool Base fabric batting practice jersey in 2007, made by Majestic.

The jersey features a one-button neck and pale gold insert side panels.

All lettering and designs are single-layer, heat-pressed appliqués, no longer sewn-on multi-layer tackle twill.

While some decried the move away from layered twill, for teams like the Brewers — with three-layer designs front and back — it makes the new garments lighter and more pliable in use.

Gold side panels continue as before, but now begin higher on the jersey and extend to cover the entire under-sleeve. Back lettering remains unchanged, using three-color player names and numbers in white/navy/metallic gold 3D drop shadow. Knit trim is now sewn at the sleeve ends and neck — navy with a white center stripe.

The back lettering is extra bold, with a thick second yellow outline that fills the centers of normally closed letters (like O, B, and D). It is intended to be worn on days when the retro home game jersey is used. This jersey is also worn occasionally as a game jersey, despite the team's already extensive uniform options.

2016 Spring Training

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

For the first time, MLB introduces a Spring Training–specific jersey intended for workouts and pre-season games. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Brewers use their regular-season alternate road navy jersey as the basis for their Spring Training design. Name and back numbers are in white patterned twill with blue/yellow 3D drop shadow. Front numbers use the standard white/blue/yellow 3D drop shadow. Sleeve-end trim is changed to "retro yellow" knit, replacing the earlier metallic gold style. The jersey also features a rubberiized CFX patch on the right sleeve during Spring Training in the shape of an Interstate sign with "2016" and "AZ" on it.

Bottom right: Non-roster Spring Training invitees are often assigned high-numbered jerseys without names on back

Spring Training–only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with minor design updates. As in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, now decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. All teams now use the same twill — a single-color white layer with gray printing — replacing the varied team-specific designs used the previous year.

The Brewers again use their regular-season alternate road navy jersey as the base. Name and back numbers are in white patterned twill. Front numbers use the standard white/blue/yellow 3D drop shadow as in the regular season. The jersey features a recolored rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “AZ” to represent the Brewers’ Spring Training location.

2017-2019 Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls "lightweight twill" (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Brewers have two official BP jerseys: the standard version is navy blue with gold underarm gussets and features the "M" cap logo on the left chest; the retro version is royal blue with yellow back and underarm panels, featuring the "ball-in-glove" logo on the left chest. Both versions have blank backs, and player numbers are applied to the middle of the left sleeve.

The Brewers have two official BP jerseys: the standard version (top), and the nostalgia version (bottom), which is worn without sleeve numbers in Spring Training and with them during regular-season games when the retro home uniform is used.

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design from the previous year, with all player name and number lettering using each team's regular-season fonts, now simplified into a single layer of twill printed with Spring Training and 2018-specific patterns. The Brewers use their regular-season navy road alternate as the base. Name and back numbers are sewn in white patterned twill. Front numbers use the standard white/blue/yellow 3D drop shadow seen in the regular season. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate and featuring "2018" and "AZ" to represent the Brewers' Spring Training home, is stitched to the right sleeve.

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey introduces another variation on the theme used the previous three years. Single-color printed twill is eliminated, and teams return to regular-season multi-layer twill for player names and numbers — now without the printed patterns seen in 2016. The Brewers use their regular-season navy road alternate as the base. Name and front and back numbers are rendered in white/blue/yellow 3D drop shadow. A new CFX patch appears on the right sleeve, featuring “2019” and “ARZ” to represent their Spring Training location.

2020-2023 Home Spring Training

Spring Training is simplified across MLB for 2020. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys no longer include a special sleeve patch indicating the year and location, and all lettering now uses the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as in the regular season. The Brewers wear their home jerseys during Spring Training workouts and games, featuring blue/yellow lettering throughout — including the front logo, front and back numbers, and player names. The jersey is cream-colored, using Nike's version of the former Majestic Flex Base template. The front wordmark appears in a vertically arched serif font, with a matching custom-font front number on the left chest. Player names on back are radially arched in the same font, positioned above custom-font back numbers. Sleeve ends feature wide blue/yellow/blue sewn-in trim. A new navy, royal blue, and yellow baseball logo with wheat stalks in place of stitches is worn on the left sleeve. For the set's inaugural season in 2020, a 50th anniversary patch is worn on the right sleeve; in 2021, it is replaced by a Hank Aaron memorial patch.

2020-2023 Alternate Spring Training

Beginning in 2020, Spring Training is simplified league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home. The lettering is now the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as used during the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season road alternates. The Brewers use their alternate blue jerseys in Spring Training for some workouts and games, featuring yellow/blue lettering throughout—on the front logo, front and back numbers, and player names.

1994 Turn Back the Clock to 1970

Stephen Kraljic Collection

At 11th hour, Brewers turn back the clock

By JAY JOSLYN
Sentinel staff writer

In loose-tailored 1970 uniforms, the Brewers and the Orioles really looked like the boys of summer Thursday at the Turn Back the Clock Night in County Stadium.

Perhaps it was the young-looking uniforms that kept the 1970s players' minds on the game and not on the bargaining table.

A fallish nip to the air, and the threat of a players' strike, made the start of the Orioles series Thursday feel like it was the end of the season.

The ushers and vendors got into the act by wearing tie-dye bandannas and peace medallions. The feeling must have been persuasive. The crowd of 30,150 left only the edges of the uppermost sections of the stands empty. That full look nearly turned back the years to the game when Milwaukee returned to the American League. On that bright, warm April afternoon 37,237 fans broke the town's four baseball-less year drought.

The uniforms may have looked like they did 25 seasons ago, but the illusion wasn't complete.

The most important difference was that there was no shut-out Thursday. The Brewers got more than four hits.

Prices were cut to a dollar at the concession stands, but only for hot dogs, regular-sized sodas, popcorn and peanuts. Vendor prices were unchanged.

On opening day a generation ago, the price of beer and coffee was 50 cents. On Thursday, beer went for $3.25 and $2.75, and coffee was a bargain at double the 1970 price.

The reduced prices did heat up hot dog and soda sales, but that did not mean that beer and nachos sales were hurt.

One of the evening's gimmicks was the announcement of the 1970 All-Star teams with volunteers impersonating the stars in appropriate uniforms. The umpires didn't play along. The home plate umpire didn't wear an American League balloon chest protector.

It was disconcerting.

In the All-Star round-up, the fellow playing Henry Aaron was much too big and the Frank Howard and Boog Powell surrogates were much too small.

There were a couple more American League logos on the outfield fence. And the scoreboard boasted brilliant television pictures. The nearly incomprehensible sound system was about the same.

On Opening Day 25 seasons ago, County Executive John Doyne threw out the first ball. During Thursday's Pick 'n Save Turn Back the Clock Night, Rick Swan, representing the grocery store, did the honors wearing a Cincinnati Reds uniform.

There were a lot more heroics Thursday than there were on that sad Opening Day. Kevin Seitzer, recovering from a recent pitched ball in the face, smashed a double in his first at bat. Jose Valentin tied up the game in the third with the nicest two-run homer you can imagine.

If the turn-back-the-years idea were to be taken to its extreme, Thursday's matchup had historic meaning.

The Brewers were one of the first eight teams in the American League in 1901. They stayed alive only one year before the franchise became the St. Louis Browns for 51 years. For the last 40 years, the original Milwaukee franchise has been in Baltimore.

The Brewers invited the Orioles to Milwaukee on August 4, 1994, for a Turn Back the Clock game to 1970. Both teams wore replicas of their 1970 uniforms made by Mitchell & Ness. Made to look like flannel, they were actually more of a cotton-twill than real flannel. The cut was sack-like compared to the tailored fit of the actual 1970 jerseys.

Back number font is Block with Serifs, but it should correctly be Wilson Varsity. Otherwise, good copies.

Steve Kraljic collection

These Turn Back the Clock jerseys, worn on June 8, 1995, reproduce the 1972–1977 style and are made by Mitchell & Ness. The lettering is very accurate, as are the sleeve ends. However, the neck trim's yellow band is about twice as thick as it should be. The number font is Block with Serifs, which is inaccurate. The font actually used in those years was Wilson's Standard Varsity or Sand-Knit Varsity, depending on the year and manufacturer. Their opponents that day were the Cleveland Indians, who dressed in 1977 attire.

The July 31, 1996 contest pitted a throwback Brewers team representing the 1946 independent league club against the 1946 Seattle Rainiers (Mariners).

These throwbacks are actually based on the 1947 Brewers uniforms, according to Brewers historian Chance Michaels. The design was inspired by the 1946 Boston Braves' uniforms.

The Brewers' uniforms were made of double knit by Mitchell & Ness, with logos sewn by Ebbets Field Flannels for M&N.

1997 Turn Back the Clock to 1982

Above: This claimed game-worn jersey has had the leading "1" removed from its number, originally 15 on both front and back.

On June 17, 1997, the Brewers Turned Back the Clock to 1982 and wore Rawlings-made uniforms to play the similarly attired 1982 Cardinals, reprising the team's only World Series appearance.

Names on back are correctly omitted, as they were not worn during 1978–1989. Player numbers are Block with Serifs, which would be accurate for 1987 but not for 1982, when the number style would have been Sand-Knit Varsity.

1998 St. Patrick's Day

A "0006" tag generally indicates a garment made for team use.

The Brewers wore St. Patrick's green in Spring Training 1998. Majestic batting practice jerseys were made in Kelly green, and the logos and numbers were stitched in the same colors used on the navy blue BP jersey from that year.

1998 Turn Back the Clock to 1958 Milwaukee Braves

- June 2, 1998 was a long-awaited day in Milwaukee. With the Brewers' move to the National League in an offseason reorganization, they would play the Braves as part of the regular season schedule.
- For this first series, the Brewers hatched an innovative idea: the Brewers would dress as the home Braves of the late 1950s glory days, and the visiting Atlanta team could dress as the road version of the same team, wearing gray uniforms.
- Even though this was regarded as a memorable event, during my research I have been able to find only a single color photo of the action in that game. I hope to locate more over time.

Braves' return triggers excitement (June 1, 1998)

The Associated Press
MILWAUKEE (AP) - The Braves are returning to County Stadium today for the first time since they bolted to Atlanta following the 1965 season.
"I'm excited they're coming back. I feel in the end that sort of closes the whole loop on that story," said Brewers owner Bud Selig, who returned baseball to Milwaukee with an American League team in 1970. "It's one of those ironic moments in history. People are excited, and I'm exited," Selig added. Milwaukee returned to the National League this season to accommodate the expansion teams in Arizona and Florida.
When the schedule came out, Selig looked right away for the one home series with the Braves.
"I did, right off the bat. I certainly did. And I'm only sorry they're coming here once. But next year I know they're coming here twice, so it'll be good," Selig said.
Braves chairman Bill Bartholomay, who took his team to Atlanta for the 1966 season, will attend the three-game series that will include a turn-back-the-clock promotion on Tuesday in which the Braves will wear 1958 Milwaukee Braves road uniforms and the Brewers will wear 1958 Braves home duds.

1999 St. Patrick's Day

For St. Patrick's Day 1999, the Brewers created a mesh, Kelly green–bodied pullover with the alternate jersey wordmark on the front in white/navy/metallic gold, the team patch on the left sleeve, and three-color player numbers on the back with no player names used. Majestic is the supplier.

1999 Turn Back the Clock to 1969 Seattle Pilots

In this July 20, 1999 game vs. the Chicago White Sox, the Brewers dressed as the 1969 Seattle Pilots—the franchise's origin. The White Sox wore 1969-style road uniforms.

Jerseys were made in double knit by Majestic. They included the 1969 MLB 100th Anniversary patch on the sleeve, which is inaccurate, as the Pilots only wore this patch on their road jerseys—not on the home versions.

The Beer Barrel Man as he appeared in the 1970s. This is his first appearance ever on a Brewers game jersey

Left: Team-issued versions have the Russell "R" embroidered on the right sleeve end. This is missing on the retail versions we have seen..

Used July 23, 1999 vs. the Marlins. This one-game-only jersey features the Beer Barrel Man, a long-standing symbol of the Brewers, but one never before featured on a team uniform.

The back lettering is dark green outlined with yellow and uses the same type font employed by most (but not all) other teams—including the Phillies, Cardinals, Rockies, and Diamondbacks. These uniforms are extremely rare. Very few were made for retail sale, and game-worn jerseys were given to the players who wore them.

2000 Turn Back the Clock to 1989

1978–1989 style uniforms, made by Rawlings, were worn for a Turn Back the Clock game against the Indians, who were dressed in 1989-style uniforms, on June 6, 2000 in Milwaukee.

Names on back are correctly omitted, as they were not worn from 1978–1989. Player numbers are Block with Serifs, which would be correct for 1989.

Better photographs are always welcome. If you have one of these specific jerseys, we'd love to hear from you.

2000 Turn Back the Clock to 1969 Seattle Pilots Spring Training

The Twins hosted a Turn Back the Clock game to 1969 on June 10, 2000, and invited the Brewers to participate. There was only one problem: the Brewers did not yet exist in 1969, as the franchise had previously been the one-year-only Seattle Pilots.

The Brewers wore (slightly inaccurate) recreations of the 1969 Seattle Pilots Spring Training grays—a stark uniform that was only used until the start of the 1969 regular season, when the Pilots' regular and more unconventional uniforms were unveiled. The use of the MLB 100th Anniversary patch on the left sleeve is historically inaccurate, as the Pilots only wore this patch on their road blue uniforms during the regular season. One newspaper account put it humorously:

> "The Pilots have finally broken their 30-plus year losing streak! On June 10, 2000, the Brewers wore the Pilots' Spring Training uniforms for Turn Back the Clock Night against the Twins in the Metrodome. Not even the mojo supplied by promotional Harmon Killebrew bobbing head dolls could hold back the Pilots, who took a 5-3 win behind the pitching of Jimmy Haynes"

2001 Turn Back the Clock to 1970

On June 6, 2001, Turn Back the Clock uniforms representing the 1970 Milwaukee Brewers were worn. These jerseys were made by Rawlings in double knit, though the originals were flannel.

This game commemorated the Brewers' first season of 1970. The opponent that day was the Cincinnati Reds, dressed in 1970-style uniforms.

2001 Negro Leagues Tribute (1923 Milwaukee Bears)

Steve Kraljic collection

On June 9, 2001, the Brewers visited the Tigers for a Negro Leagues Turn Back the Clock game in Detroit. The Brewers wore road uniforms of the 1923 Milwaukee Bears, made by AIS. The Tigers wore replicas of the pinstriped home uniforms of the 1920 Detroit Stars.

A Note on Brewers Turn Back the Clock games: From 1993–2019, the Brewers scheduled at least one throwback game each year, and have occasionally participated in two or even three such games in a season. In 2006 they announced that each year they would hold an annual Negro League Tribute game. In 2014 there was a road Negro League Tribute game, but none at home. 2019 was the last time the team participated in one.

1978–1989 style uniforms, made by Majestic. A specific date or opponent for this game has not yet been confirmed, but it appears the team was turning back to 1982 to commemorate their only World Series appearance.

Names on back are correctly omitted, as they were not worn during 1978–1989. Player numbers are Block with Serifs, which would be correct for 1987–1989 but not for 1982, when the uniforms were made by Sand-Knit and used the Sand-Knit Varsity font. A ball-in-glove logo patch is used on the sleeve, but it was not part of the actual 1982 uniform.

1957 original

The Brewers dressed as the 1957 Milwaukee Braves, May 22, 2002, in period-accurate zipper-front jerseys made by Rawlings using modern double knit fabric.

The reproductions are fairly accurate, though the front script is not an exact match. The construction of the front placket trim differs from the original, although this section tucks in and cannot be seen in use. Oddly, the sleeves on the 2002 jerseys are very long—almost like those on early-1900s jerseys.

Original press releases indicated that the visiting Dodgers would also participate, but they did not. See the Dodgers chapter for further insight into this.

2003 Turn Back the Clock to 1978

Guy Hankel collection

On July 9, 2003, the Brewers turn back the clock a quarter-century, reprising the 1978 season. The Pirates were the 1978-attired opponents.

These uniforms are made by Majestic and feature the popular—though inaccurate for this jersey—Milwaukee Brewers "MB" ball-in-glove logo on the sleeve. This logo never appears on the sleeve of an actual game jersey.

Names on back are correctly omitted, as they are not used in 1978. Player numbers are in Block, which is inaccurate. The proper font for 1978 is Sand-Knit Varsity.

The promotion proves so popular in 1998 that it returns in 2004 and again in 2005. On May 14, 2004, and August 26, 2005, the Milwaukee Brewers dress as the 1957 Milwaukee Braves—and face the Atlanta Braves in Milwaukee...confusing! The Brewers wear the Braves' home whites with a laughing-brave patch sewn to the sleeve in these recreations of the old flannel uniforms, rendered in modern double knit fabric by Majestic. These Majestic replicas use button-front construction, unlike the original 1957 zipper-front jerseys.

The 2004 and 2005 jerseys are identical in appearance, though they differ in collar tagging codes. Jerseys are auctioned after the game, and each auctioned jersey appears to be autographed. As for the real Braves, they refused to play along both years, wearing their normal road uniforms instead.

- September 6, 2008

- To celebrate the Brewers' relationship with the Hispanic community, the team annually hosts "Cerveceros Day." Cerveceros is the Spanish translation of "Brewers."
- From the Brewers' press release announcing the event in 2006: "For Cerveceros Day, the Brewers will wear alternate uniforms for their game against the Cincinnati Reds, and plan to transform Miller Park with bilingual public address announcements, Latin-themed music, and videos featuring some of the game's great Hispanic players."
- Aside from collar tagging, the jerseys used in these three years appear identical.

Held August 14, 2007 vs. the St. Louis Cardinals, marking the 25th anniversary of the World Series between these two teams.

The Brewers wore special Majestic retro uniforms for the game and not their usual Friday-night retro alternates. These one-game-only uniforms feature V-neck pullover jerseys, no names on back and no patch on the sleeve. Pants are the old wide stretch waistband style. Jersey sleeve openings seem unnaturally blousy and large.

Observing 1982-style fashion rules, several players wore their pants high with socks showing. But ignoring period style, most players wore the uniforms oversized, half-untucked and with pants too baggy.

Their opponents were the Phillies, who wore baby blue 1970s road throwbacks.

Only the detail-obsessed like us would notice that the font used for player numbers was Block with Serifs instead of the Varsity fonts (either Wilson or Sand-Knit) that were used on the field 1972–1977.

2010 Turn Back the Clock to the 1980s

June 25, 2010 the Brewers wore reproductions of the home 1978–1989 uniforms. The uniform is highlighted by pinstripes with "BREWERS" vertically arched Block letters on the front. The uniform recreations? On paper, quite good. But—the way they looked on the field? Totally ridiculous. Uniforms in the early 1980s were worn high-stirruped and skintight, which helped make the wide sans-a-belt elastic waist bands and thick V-neck trim passable (see period photo below). When worn like baggy clown suits, they look, well, stupid. Front wordmarks hanging at waist level? No baseball players from any era looked like this. The Mariners wore their light blue road uniforms of 1981–1984.

Here, Robin Yount, skintight and high-stirruped, back in the day.

The Brewers wore reproductions of their 1998 home uniforms on July 23. The jerseys' tagging does not indicate that this throwback represents 1998, but the tag on the uniform's pants did include that as the year intended. In that regard, the jersey is not 100% accurate, as the Brewers wore a Wisconsin Sesquicentennial patch that year. Of note, every year they wore this style had a different sleeve patch, 1997 had the Jackie Robinson patch, and 1999 had the County Stadium Final Season patch. As such, this jersey better represents the 1997–1999 era than any specific year.

The jersey has "BREWERS" in the fancy Brewers Gothic letters on the front and the correct numbers and NOB. Majestic's replicas were as close to perfectly accurate as they could get… if one could not see the Triple Peaks logo on the left sleeve one would probably not know they were reproductions. The one big difference, which was less perceptible unless compared against an original, was that all the lettering was considerably larger than it had been in the 1990s. Perhaps it was to compensate for how much larger players wear their uniforms in 2010 vs. 1998. Even harder to see was that the shade of green used in the throwback was slightly darker than in the original jerseys.

The tag on the pants that match the jersey shown above reveal that 1998 was the intended year for this throwback jersey.

Note the lettering size and color difference between an original 1998 jersey and the 2010 throwback.

2011 “Gold-Out”

September 10, 2011: The Brewers wore special one-time-only gold “Brewers” jerseys against the visiting Phillies, encouraging all fans to “wear their Brewers Gold” for the game to create a visual statement along the lines of a college football “white-out” or other such fan frenzy events where a sea of fans dressed in one color makes an impression of huge fan support on television.

Fan response to the yellow Cerveceros jerseys from earlier in the year was rather positive. But the cynic in me notes that other than June 10, the Brewers have never worn gold before, so the only way that fans could participate in their plea for support was to either wear yellow rain slickers or… yes, buy a new gold Brewers jersey to wear at the game.

These Cool Base gold jerseys are lettered throughout in navy/white/navy 3D drop shadow.

August 4, 2012: The Brewers visited the Cardinals for a Turn Back the Clock game to reprise their mutual World Series year of 1982. The Cardinals wore white replica 1982 pullover uniforms. Aside from being worn too baggy, these are pretty accurate to the real thing. Knit sleeve trim is marginally wider than the originals, and the front script is slightly less bold. Front and back numbers surprisingly appear to be a reasonably close copy of the original Sand-Knit Varsity numbers used in 1982.

2013-2014 Memorial Day

Read the full story on MLB's Memorial Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

MLB decreed that all teams should wear camouflage-lettered jerseys on Memorial Day, May 27, 2013 and May 26, 2014. The Brewers were home both dates, hosting the Twins and Orioles, respectively. Their white jerseys are altered to replace the highly visible navy blue lettering with highly invisible desert camouflage. No surprise, as that is the job of camouflage. The surprise to me is the 2014 repeat of the promotion after many commented on this issue in 2013.

May 30, 2013: Milwaukee at Minnesota (1948 minor league throwbacks). This masterful recreation used a surviving 1948 jersey sourced at auction for the model, differing from the original only in its use of buttons instead of a zipper front. In a somewhat odd occurrence, these home whites were worn at a road game in Minnesota, with the Twins wearing road grays of the St. Paul Saints. Sources report that the original plan was to repeat the use of these uniform sets in Milwaukee, but the Brewers declined, citing too many special uniform days already planned (imagine that!). By my count, the Brewers wore 15 different uniforms in 2013 — counting road and home games, St. Patrick's Day and the special March 22 "Youniform" game).

2013 Polish Heritage

June 23, 2013: Celebrating the incredible diversity of the Milwaukee region — and the Brewers' insatiable appetite for special uniform days — the team wore these Polish-themed, BP-weight jerseys. The front wordmark appears in navy/white with metallic gold/navy 3D drop shadow; the back lettering is in navy/white/metallic gold 3D drop shadow. The visiting Braves did not participate in the Polish celebration, wearing their navy blue alternate road uniforms.

2013 Negro Leagues Tribute (1923 Milwaukee Bears)

July 20, 2013: For their eighth annual Negro Leagues tribute game, the Brewers wore the home uniforms of the one-year 1923 Milwaukee Bears, in a game against the 1956-attired Miami Marlins. This is the fourth time the Brewers have worn this identically styled jersey made by AIS, also donning them in 2006, 2007, and 2008. It features simple navy blue lettering on front and back. This represents the 14th different jersey the Brewers wore during the 2013 season!

2014 St. Patrick's Day

The Brewers have been infrequent participants in the wearing of St. Patrick's Day green, but they elected to play along on March 17, 2014. They wore a green version of their new-for-2014 batting practice jersey, swapping the navy blue for kelly green, then auctioning off the jerseys later.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1937 Minor League Brewers

May 18, 2014: The Brewers visited the Chicago Cubs during their year-long celebration of the 100th birthday of Wrigley Field. The Brewers wore 1937 throwbacks. Close, but the front placket was too wide, creating odd spacing between the letters, and the wordmark is sewn too low. Back numbers are also sewn too low, as if they were leaving a space for player names to be added. These jerseys were made by Ebbetts Field Flannels, Compare with original 1936 Brewers jerseys right and bottom right. Note how long the original's sleeves were!

2015 Memorial Day

After two years of nearly illegible camo lettering on white jerseys, the Brewers make a sound decision for Memorial Day 2015. This year, the layer of desert camo replaces the top, white layer of twill on the blue alternate jersey, making for a much more readable product. The front wordmark, with all of its flowing cursive, is still tough to read, especially when complicated with a blue outline and white 3D drop shadow. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/white rather than its typical colors of years past.

2015 Independence Day

Read the full story on MLB's Independence Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palette might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Brewers wear their road gray jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in red, including their front logo as well as front and back numbers (all sans 3D drop shadow layers). Two-layer twill replaces the usual four-color front lettering on the jerseys. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

2015 Negro Leagues Tribute (1923 Milwaukee Bears)

On July 18, 2015, the Brewers once again wear the home uniforms of the Negro League's 1923 Milwaukee Bears, in a game against the Pirates, who don Negro League Pittsburgh Crawfords jerseys. This is the fifth time the Brewers have worn this white jersey with navy pinstripes, but the first time it has been made by Majestic. The full-weight knit jersey features simple navy blue lettering on front and back. The lettering is less bold than the previous AIS versions, and the vintage-style sun collar is smaller and less pronounced on this set.

2015 Hispanic Heritage

Guy Hankel Collection

On August 8, 2015, the Brewers once again celebrate their community's Hispanic heritage by wearing gold Cool Base "Cerveceros" jerseys. Previous versions are tagged with the game's date in the collar, but the 2015 jerseys adopt Majestic's QR-coded, heat-pressed tag in the tail instead, which does not specify the date of the game. As before, all lettering is navy/white/navy 3D drop shadow.

2016 Mother's Day

Guy Hankel Collection

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white.

The Brewers wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. There is no 3D drop shadow on front or back of these jerseys, in contrast to the standard version. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally blue/gold/blue, becomes dark gray.

2016-2017 Hispanic Heritage

With the change in template to Flex Base jerseys, the gold Cerveceros jersey follows suit, despite the fact that the Brewers' regular gold alternates are no longer in rotation for 2016. Other than the move to Flex Base, the look of the jersey remains the same as it has since 2011, with all lettering navy/white/navy 3D drop shadow. This jersey is used in 2016 on August 13, and in 2017 on July 1.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Brewers apply the camouflage trimmings to their home white jerseys for the game on May 30. The front lettering (usually two-color plus a two-color 3D drop shadow) and front and back numbers (usually two-color with 3D drop shadow) are reduced to two colors, woodland camo with a black outline, while player names appear in single-color black. Like other teams, their sleeve patches are rendered in shades of green, gray, and black, and trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The highly stylized bold cursive of the “Brewers” front lettering is slightly muddled by the camo/black treatment, even with its simplification and contrast against the white jersey body.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1976

Guy Hankel Collection

The Brewers throw back 40 years to 1976 for two road games against the 1976-clad Phillies on June 3 and 5. These full-weight knit jerseys by Majestic capture the spirit of the mid-70s Brewers roads very well, even taking care to recreate Sand-Knit's Brewers Varsity style numbers (evident in the oddly shaped #5). Royal blue/yellow numbers appear on both front and back, and the backs correctly lack player names. The sleeve trim here is slightly wider than the originals, but otherwise, a fine-looking throw-back effort.

2016 Father's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Father's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

2016 Negro Leagues Tribute (1923 Milwaukee Bears)

On June 25, 2016, the Brewers once again wear the home uniforms of the Negro League's 1923 Milwaukee Bears, this time for a contest against the Nationals, who wear Homestead Grays road uniforms. This knit set, again by Majestic, is identical to the 2015 version. It is the sixth time the Brewers have honored this short-lived Negro League team in this particular uniform.

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Brewers are on the road and wear their alternate blue road jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Brewers select the red twill version with gray outlines to replace their typically three-color front lettering and front and back numbers, with a gray player name on back. There is no 3D drop shadow on these jerseys, in contrast to the standard version. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. New for 2016, team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue, replacing team colors, and all jersey trim, normally gold, becomes single-color red. The highly stylized cursive of the "Milwaukee" front lettering is slightly muddled by the busy red twill/gray treatment, even with its simplification and contrast against the blue jersey body.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to the 1990s

Guy Hankel Collection

On July 30, the Brewers throw back to their 1990s “Gothic” set for the second time. This time, however, they represent the 1994–1996 incarnation, rather than the 1997–1999 version worn for the 2010 throwback game. The jersey has “BREWERS” in the fancy Brewers Gothic letters on the front and the correct numbers and NOB. Overall, they are excellent recreations of their on-field look of two decades prior. Incidentally, the Brewers wore commemorative patches on both their 1994 and 1996 sets, so this uniform best represents their 1995 uniforms, since it lacks any sleeve patches.

2017 Mother's Day

Pink-trimmed Mother's Day jerseys return on May 13–14, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic heat-applied vinyl locker tag and team inventory tag inside the bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon glued to the left chest; the pink Majestic sleeve logo; and the dark pink/light pink/white ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter applique stitched on the back of the collar. All multi-colored lettering is done in the lightweight-twill style. The Brewers wear a white version of their road alternate blue jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally gold, becomes dark gray.

2017 Memorial Day (Home)

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of--collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Brewers apply this style to a white version of their road blue alternate jerseys on May 27–28, 2017.

2017-2018 Independence Day (Home)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the new twill — appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 2–4, 2017 and July 2–4, 2018, the Brewers wear a white version of their road blue alternate jersey with "Milwaukee" on the front in blue patterned twill, with red front logo lettering and red front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

2017 Turn Back the Clock to 1982

Steve Kraljic collection

With the Brewers' only World Series appearance coming in 1982, it is no wonder that the team likes to relive this era in its nostalgic jerseys. For the 35th anniversary of that season, they break out home white throwbacks in Cool Base fabric, by Majestic, on July 14–16, 2017.

These pinstriped pullovers with blue V-necks look similar to the Sand-Knit originals but do not match well in terms of lettering and numbering. The blue/yellow radially arched front letters are too condensed and widely spaced compared to the 1982 set, and the front and back numbers are in standard Varsity rather than Sand-Knit's distinctive version of Varsity as used during their on-field MLB jersey tenure.

2017-2019 Negro Leagues Tributes (1923 Milwaukee Bears)

Steve Kraljic collection

In recent years, the Brewers have taken to honoring the Negro Leagues' 1923 Milwaukee Bears by wearing this uniform often for tribute nights. The same jersey reappears on August 12, 2017; August 3, 2018; and June 1 and 7, 2019. The basic template of the previous versions is repeated here again, though this version is now on Cool Base fabric rather than full knit from prior years.

2017 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2¾-inch single-color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25-27, 2017, the Brewers wear jerseys with navy blue bodies and yellow sleeves with white nicknames and yellow numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide yellow/white/yellow trim. The front features their home jersey script, here rendered in yellow/blue/white 3D drop shadow kiss-cut lightweight twill.

2018 St. Patrick's Day

For a brief time in the 1990s, green served as an accent color for the Brewers. Since then, it has primarily reappeared in the form of special holiday jerseys, and it returned prominently for St. Patrick's Day 2018. The team's first such jersey since 2014, this green Flex Base entry borrows the 'Milwaukee' script from the road alternate jersey, rendered in white/gray on front, with front and back numbers in the Brewers' custom font in white/gray as well. Names on back appear in white in the Brewers font, while white knit trim appears just above the sleeve ends, and the white shamrock patch—a staple of green-wearing St. Pat's teams in recent years—appears on the right sleeve.

2018 Memorial Day (Home)

The 2018 Memorial Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017, with dark olive green/black front lettering and numbers joined by solid-color black player names on back. The outlines are nearly impossible to see as the two colors are so close in hue to each other. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team-specific sleeve patches also are repeated from 2017 with an olive green and black treatment. Trim elements are again simplified to single-color black, and a green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, is stitched to the right sleeve. The Brewers apply this style to their home jerseys on May 26–28, 2018.

2018 Turn Back the Clock to the Early 1980s

Steve Kraljic collection

The Brewers again commemorate their early-80s glory on June 2–3, 2018, this time in their road uniform of the era. These Majestic replicas are very well done, much better than the home version the year before—odd because home teams usually purchase sets for both teams in these cases, so it appears perhaps the White Sox paid more attention to detail on the Brewers' behalf than the Brewers did for themselves. These powder blue pullovers with sewn-in blue/yellow/blue trim around the V-necks and sleeve ends have all lettering and numbers in layered blue/yellow. The front wordmark is slightly more condensed than the original, but the key here is the replication of the accurate Sand-Knit Varsity numbers on front and back, especially noticeable on the number "5." The White Sox countered with their 1983 "SOX" uniforms.

2018-2019 Hispanic Heritage

The Brewers last wore a white Cerveceros jersey in the regular season in 2008 (though it did appear, sans names on back, in Spring Training from 2010–2015). But it returns to the regular season on July 7 and September 17, 2018, and July 13 and September 16, 2019. It is identical to the 2008 entry, except it is now executed on the Majestic Flex Base jersey. Like its predecessor, aside from the change in front wordmark from “Brewers” to “Cerveceros,” these are the same as the team’s home jerseys.

Steve Kraljic collection

The Brewers have honored the short-lived 1923 Negro League Milwaukee Bears on the road before, just with a different jersey, which is curious because the Bears played less than a full season before disbanding. It is likely that so little is known of that team that discerning their uniforms from photos is challenging, so this may be more of a fauxback than a faithful representation of that team. This road entry from July 13, 2018 is identical to the home version used annually apart from the switch in color of the Cool Base material from white to gray. The blue sun collar and blue front and back lettering all carry over unchanged.

2018 Players Weekend

Players Weekend returns for a second year—a promotion intended to highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans. Brightly colored jerseys are worn on the field on August 24–26, 2018, and once again, the Cool Base pullover jerseys are based on youth league designs with a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people with handwritten messages. Both the patch and the back-of-collar logo, feature an adaptation of the MLB logo showing the evolution of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic and set tags appear on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. The Brewers wear jerseys with navy blue bodies and yellow sleeves with white nicknames and yellow numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide yellow/white/yellow trim. The front features lettering based on their road alternate jersey script, here rendered in yellow/blue/white 3D drop shadow kiss-cut twill.

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019.

Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Brewers wear a white version of their road alternate jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in white/gray with gray nickname on back.

1969 Pilots Prototypes

Despite being the shortest-lived team in MLB history, the Seattle Pilots had several uniform prototypes leading up to their only season in 1969. Their short tenure, and the fact that they never wore knit jerseys, mean that they are not covered with a chapter of their own in this book. However, because they became the Milwaukee Brewers after their lone season, and because we do cover the final flannel examples teams wore before switching to knits, and because (we admit it!) we love to cover oddballs and prototypes, we present the Pilots unusual uniform history here. Credit to Paul Lukas of uni-watch.com who, with the help of other readers and researchers, collected and presented the information we reproduce in these pages.

On October 10, 1968, Pilots' Manager joe Schultz modeled a prototype Pilots road jersey and cap for promo photos that were reproduced in newspapers across the country. Neither the jersey nor the cap he wore that day made the field when the Pilots started their season mere months later. The flannel jersey he wore had "Seattle" rendered straight across the chest, an element that was changed into arched lettering prior to the season. The color of the road jersey (either gray or powder blue) was indiscernible from the black and white press photos. However, in a 2023 column, Lukas published photos of the Pilots' prototype home and road uniforms taken before Shultz' photo shoot, modeled by Jim Kittilsby, assistant to Pilots GM Marvin Milkes. In a podcast interview, Kittilsby said he got the job to model the uniforms simply because they fit him.

> "I used to order the equipment, including uniforms. I always bought stuff from Wilson Sporting Goods — the Sorianos [the Pilots' owners] always used Wilson Sporting Goods at the time. They sent uniform samples and I was the model and they would take pictures of me, because the samples were always size 38. Most of the people on the staff were bigger — the men, most of the men were bigger than a 38. But at the time, I was five foot seven, I was about 160 pounds, so I was stocky enough to to wear those. And I wasn't selected because of my rank or my importance — it was because they fit me."

The photos of Kittilsby show the same straight lettering, and confirm the color of the uniform Schultz is wearing in his photos. It is even possible they are the same uniforms.

Not long after Schultz' October photo shoot, a different Pilots road jersey was displayed at MLB's winter meetings in December. A press photo of the time showed a partial view of the jersey as part of a Wilson uniform and equipment display. This sample, likely a road jersey given the "Seattle" lettering, used a very angular script that was quite different from the team's eventual rounded lettering style. Curiously, it included the multiple sleeve stripes used in the eventual on-field jerseys, though there appear to be even more of them in the sample than on the final jerseys. Graphic Designer Todd Radom featured this press photo on his blog, and also created a mock-up of a best guess of how the Seattle script may have looked.

After months of these mixed messages, the Pilots took the field for Spring Training in 1969 with...yet another different set of uniforms. Made by Wilson, the home and road Spring Training jerseys screamed "TEMPORARY!" They featured "Pilots" in vertically arched block lettering on both sets and Wilson Varsity numbers on back. By the start of the regular season, they settled on their official, inaugural, and final uniform design that lasted the length of their sole season.

Baseball Hall of Fame –Photo credit: Steve Hovley

When the bankrupted Seattle Pilots became the Brewers just six days before the opening of the 1970 season, the team needed uniforms, and fast. A complete story is told here: (http://www.borchertfield.com/2010/06/back-in-blue.html), but in brief, we will share the condensed version.

Newspapers reported that the Brewers would be wearing the old Pilots' uniforms until their new suits arrived. Other reports indicated that there were navy pinstriped prototype(s) with red lettering being copied for production. It is also quite likely that other prototypes existed. The reason is simple: The Brewers' corporation had existed since 1965, and was on the mission to attract a new big league club for Milwaukee since the Braves' departure was imminent. It is very reasonable that prototype uniforms would have been part of the corporation's business planning collateral. But, the way the Pilots shotgun appearance in Milwaukee actually happened left no time to prepare for the season. Uniforms were needed immediately. The new ownership had to work with what little time and materials they had and do something fast!

The photo at left shows a newspaper account, this one on April 1 (in a photo dated March 18),with what is claimed to be the uniforms the Brewers would wear on opening day, It looks rather like the design the team eventually adopted for 1990, a mere twenty years later! I'd wager that this uniform was the one that had been created far in advance, in preparation for "the day." But also on April 1, just before Spring Training broke in Tempe, AZ,(below, left) pitcher Marty Patin was pictured wearing a different uniform entirely. It features the rather generic MLB "Tuscan" font used by the Red Sox, the Mets (on their road uniforms) and the Angels (up through 1970)

The colors are the familiar blue and gold, as seen on the next page. The photo at left was run by the Associated Press, and the one next to it, a photo of the team plane's stewardess disembarking on its maiden flight to Milwaukee; (April 6) where the team was greeted there by hundreds of new fans. It is quite likely that she is wearing the identical jersey shown in the prior photos. However, by their first workout on April 11 and on opening day, the Brewers actual uniforms were unveiled (far right) – the prior week's Pilots uniforms stripped of their lettering and Brewers' new lettering applied, in the identical combination of blue and yellow lettering. Pilots' sleeve trim still clearly visible (below right)

One wonders: if the Pilots had folded just a month earlier, would the Brewers' have opened their first decade in Milwaukee looking quite differently than they actually did?

1970 Prototype Home

Clayton Brewer Collection

Just after the publication of the ninth edition of this book, collector Clayton Brewer contacted me with photos of several items from his collection. Of this one, he writes: “I thought you might like color pics of the prototype Brewers jersey that you show in your guide. This is the one that the stewardess and Dave Bristol and Marty Pattin are wearing in your photos. This came from Tommy Ferguson who worked for the Brewers. It is the only one that was made.”

1970 Seattle Pilots Home

My observations: It appears that the Pilots had switched entirely to McAuliffe to supply their home uniforms for 1970. Notice that the font of numbers changed to the McAuliffe house font (used by the Red Sox and the A's among others), and notice the higher placement of the front numbers.

I will assume that the same thing happened with the 1970 Pilots road jerseys though we have never seen a survivor, they were likely all converted.

Consistent with Clayton Brewer's comments, I have also never seen a 1970 McAuliffe Brewers jersey with a number lower than 50 (See next page)

Until I write a full chapter covering the 1969 Pilots, we'll put this here as a placeholder.

This, from the collection of Clayton Brewer, who writes:

"Here are pics of my all original unrestored 1970 Seattle Pilots jersey. I got it directly from Al Federoff who was the 1970 manager for the Portland Beavers. The Beavers were going to be an affiliate for the Pilots but the Pilots became the Brewers near the end of spring training in 1970. Al Federoff was invited to the Pilots spring training in 1970 as an instructor and was issued this jersey which he kept after the Pilots moved to Milwaukee. I have never seen another 1970 tagged Pilots jersey that wasn't stripped and remade to a Brewers jersey. Also I have never seen a 1970 Pilots jersey that was issued a number lower than 50. All of the McAuliffe 1970 Pilots jerseys were stripped and remade into 1971 Brewers jerseys with the exception of this one."

"It is not true that all of the 1970 Brewers jerseys are re-lettered Pilots jerseys. All of the Wilson Brewers jerseys that are tagged 1970 started life out as Brewers jerseys. The only ones that were stripped and turned into Brewers jerseys are the 1970 Pilots McAuliffe and the 1969 Wilson Pilots home jerseys. Some 1970 McAuliffe jerseys actually started life out as Brewers jerseys. So not all 1970 McAuliffe jerseys were stripped Pilots jerseys. I have never seen a 1970 road McAuliffe or a stripped 1969 Spalding road."

1970 Year-Tagged Converted Pilots McAuliffe Jerseys - Spring Training Use Only?

Next, let's move to the McAuliffe-made Brewers jerseys that bear 1970 year tagging. There have been a few of these offered at auction, and each auction listing has made reference to the fact that each had originally been 1970 Pilots uniforms, with stitching evidence of the Pilots' 1970 sleeve trim, "wings" patch on the upper chest, and player numbers on the right chest. Yet, all of the examples we have seen have been converted to 1971 Brewers-spec, with arched BREWERS wordmark, front numbers and narrow sleeve-end and neck trim.

There is scant photo history available for easy viewing of the expansion team's 1970-1971 seasons, and the only examples of the breed I can find are these, in 1971 livery. All game photos I have located (and there are not many) from 1970-1971 show the team wearing jerseys with the Wilson numbers on the back.

So - what are these? Were the 1970 set of Pilots uniforms converted to 1970-Brewers spec and worn simultaneously (with different, McAuliffe-spec font numbers on both back and front) on the field with the more common Wilson jerseys? Or, perhaps they were they unused in 1970 but converted directly to 1971 Brewers spec? Were they used only in 1971 or 1972 spring training? (the high uniform numbers of the examples found, all 50 and higher, might suggest that). We are fairly certain that some went to the minor leagues. But so far, we have no evidence of McAuliffe-made jerseys being used in 1970, and wonder if these 1971-spec versions were used at all in the regular season.

My research has turned up an authentication done by MEARS of a similar 1970 tagged jersey (#66 for pitcher Wayne Twitchell), and their conclusion is the same as mine—jersey used in spring training only, re-lettered from a 1970-Pilots unused issue.

Perhaps someday we will take the plunge into the digital archives of the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, and see what game photos might reveal. From the evidence at hand, I suspect these were spring training jerseys with the possibility of one or two sneaking in as emergency regular-season use in 1971.

More 1970 Prototype Road

Pictured here are two different jerseys that are unlike any that the MLB Brewers wore on the field. The one at left has a 1970 year tag, the one at right has an indecipherable year tag and a 1971 number-on-front style. The Spalding jock tag on both jerseys is of the company's 1969-1970 style.

A reasonable hypothesis is that these are prototypes made by Spalding for the team's consideration.

Recall we noted at the beginning of this chapter that it seemed odd that the 1970-1971 road jersey actually used by the Brewers has a different wordmark from the home one? If the team considered and rejected this design, I suppose we can assume that the Seattle Pilots-flavored wordmark on the front of the road uniform was no accident. Again, guessing, but perhaps the road uniform wordmark design was a compromise for someone who was not satisfied with how plain and seemingly uninspired the 1970-1971 road uniform turned out to be. Decisions by committee usually cause this sort of compromise and inconsistency.

1972 Prototype Road?

My conclusions about this jersey are educated conjecture. It could quite possibly be a Brewers 1973 prototype road jersey. I have seen it for sale twice on auction sites within a year. One seller said it was made by Wilson, but the numbers (if original) are not a Wilson pattern that I know, and Wilson tagging is not apparent.

I would guess it is made by Sand-Knit judging from the font style of the numbers on both the front and back. It appears to have no wear, consistent with a sample jersey. I have no pictures of its tagging, which might answer some of these questions.

The next few pages feature a few 1973–1977 used Brewers jerseys made by McAuliffe, a small uniform company in Massachusetts, most commonly associated with the Red Sox and the Oakland Athletics. I am unconvinced that McAuliffe jerseys were used by the MLB team on the field in any regular season. McAuliffe-crafted jerseys feature differently angled and spaced front lettering, and sometimes oddly-shaped numbers. They have set-in sleeves vs. the standard raglan style sleeves seen on other Brewers jerseys. And the sleeve end trim is wrapped around and sewn over top of the sleeve end, vs. being a separate knit attachment.

I suspect that McAuliffe supplied samples, or perhaps whole sets of home uniforms to the Brewers, and the frugal team used them in Spring Training, and as extras, such as this one for the bat boy. Their minor league clubs are pictured wearing as well. Is it possible that some players may have worn a McAuliffe jersey in a game? We show a single example on the next page, but the lack of game-action photos from these years makes further research difficult.

Christopher Holtz Collection

Found for sale at auction along with the blue jersey on the prior page, this was billed by its seller as a team-used bat boy jersey. I will assume the seller came to that conclusion from the magic marker “BB” written on the McAuliffe tag inside the front hem. As far as I can determine McAuliffe never made on-field double knit jerseys for the Brewers, and perhaps this was a salesman’s sample jersey that was pressed into service for the bat boy. Whatever, it does exhibit quite a bit of wash-wear and fraying of the front wordmark. The Brewers did indeed switch manufacturers of their home uniforms, but from Wilson to Sand-Knit, and not until the 1976 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

These photos show year-tagged McAuliffe 1973–1977 home jerseys, and players in Spring Training (or in the minors) wearing likely-McAuliffe jerseys with their set-in (vs. sewn on) sleeves, different sleeve end trim and oddly styled front numbers. We have no evidence that the MLB Brewers wore McAuliffe jerseys in these years.

But just when I thought we could close the book on this whole topic, collector Peter Graber sends me this photo of George Scott batting in Milwaukee County Stadium in 1972 wearing a McAuliffe jersey, as evidenced by the font of the “5” on his shirt. So, we have proof that at least one player wore a McAuliffe jersey in a regular season game. This is why I try to “never say never.”

http://americanhistory.si.edu/sports/exhibit/gamemakers/aaron/index.cfm#

The tent card reads: Milwaukee Brewer's (sic) uniform jersey, 1975–1976. Aaron wore this uniform to finish out the last two seasons of his career.—Gift of Henry Aaron

Left: Another example of a supposed Aaron-worn jersey has Sand-Knit strip tagging added to a McAuliffe jersey! This would make any authenticator roll his eyes in disbelief.

Beside the error in spelling the team name, this exhibit draws attention because so far as we know in 1976 the Brewers did not wear McAuliffe knit uniforms. Now, we have heard of cases where particular players have supposedly demanded to wear a uniform from a specific maker because of fit or some other reason (Nolan Ryan supposedly requiring Goodman uniforms comes to mind), but the two photos at right clearly show Aaron wearing a Wilson-lettered jersey in 1976, and holding up Gorman Thomas, 1974 jersey (with #44 that would be re-assigned to Aaron in 1975) at his Brewers signing in November 1974.

While this all seems odd, let me note that we have not documented every jersey worn in every game, and while we have no other photos of McAuliffe Brewer jerseys, aside from the claimed-Bat boy jersey on the prior page, it is certainly possible that Aaron could have had this one and worn it in games.

See the chapter on team tagging for more information on McAuliffe's practice of making "special order" jerseys on request for anyone who asked, back in the innocent days of pre-Authentic Collection licensed marketing.

Grateful thanks to Brewers expert Chance Michaels, who contributed mightily to the Brewers' research in this section.

The jersey at the top left is a Wilson. The rest are almost certainly Sand-Knit team-submitted prototypes, the manufacturer's tail tag style identifies them as from 1976–1979. Wisconsin-based Sand-Knit desperately wanted to keep the Brewers' business, and offering prototype designs for consideration was one way to show they were deeply committed.

1978-1985 Rawlings Prototype?

Here is what is likely to be a Rawlings sample for the Brewers 1978–1985 road jersey. The Rawlings tag dates this jersey from between 1973–1984, so knowing exactly when this was made up is a bit of guesswork. Sand-Knit made the version of this style that the team used during those years, so it may have been a sample prepared for the change to the script-front jersey in 1978, which was rejected in favor of Sand-Knit's version. It is also possible that the team was shopping for new manufacturers in advance of their 1986 return to gray jerseys, and Rawlings made this up just to show the quality, if not the color, they could provide. Ultimately, Rawlings did get the contract to make Brewers home and road jerseys from 1987–1991, but by that time, the team had abandoned powder blue on the road.

Note that the "a" in "Milwaukee" was completely filled in with yellow background twill on this example, something that the Sand Knit jerseys of the era did not have, nor did the Rawlings gray road jerseys that followed.

1992-1993 Russell Prototype

Bill Henderson Collection

- This royal blue alternate jersey from the 1990–1993 era is the only one of these I have ever seen, so far. The Brewers did not wear a game jersey like this.
- It is a size 46 which is an uncommon size, usually not produced for retail sale. It also lacks the garment size tag at the neck that retail sale garments usually have, and does have the extra “Intera fabric” tag on the front Diamond Collection that usually appears only on team issued jerseys. I doubt this one is game worn.
- The team patch on the sleeve is a yellow State of Wisconsin, similar to the gold/green sleeve patch found on team jackets a year or two later.

1995 Unused MLB Players' Strike: Replacement Player Jerseys

The baseball players' strike of 1994–1995 ended just before the scheduled start of the 1995 season. While most teams prepared to start the season with replacement players and even prepared uniforms for them to wear, they were never needed. Several replacement player jerseys from the Brewers organization have surfaced. The home jerseys have replacement player names sewn on nameplates over the regular roster player names, and the regular roster player names are tagged in the collar. The navy alternate jerseys are sewn without player names at all and seem to have the replacement player names in the collar tags. (Alan Lewis #8 was to have been the replacement starting third baseman, #39 was Dave Fitzgerald, a pitcher). I must imagine that when the season began with regular players on the diamond that the cover-up nameplates were simply removed. I don't know what happened to the nameless blue alternate set. I wonder if anyone who owns a 1995 Brewers game worn jersey might hold it to the light to see if an outline of a nameplate is visible?

2001-2002 Alternate Batting Practice?

This batting practice jersey carries a store-bought “Majestic Authentic Tag," but instead of using the Brewers script across the front, it uses the Miller Beer inspired stylized-Milwaukee “M” seen on the team’s caps and sleeve patch. The jersey’s mesh construction dates it from 2001–2002.

I have never seen one of these on a player, and suspect that they were sold only to fans at retail. Though it is odd for garments with “Authentic” collection tagging to not be issued to players.

2010 St. Patrick’s Day?

Advertised for retail sale as a 2010 St. Patrick’s jersey, this item is not game worn. Did the Brewers wear green jerseys in Spring Training in 2010? We do not believe so, but put that on the “more research required” list.

2020 Nike Sample Home

Though Nike's 2020 entry into MLB jerseys resulted only in the rebranding and relabeling of Majestic's previous Flex Base jersey template, it appears that Nike still produced sample jerseys for team inspection. Here is one such example, made up for the Brewers.

This jersey's pedigree as a sample is apparent in a few details. First, it is size 46, a common sample size, and the name "PLAYER" and number "20" are also typical for samples, where 20 represents the year for which the sample was made. Further, it carries interior tagging with the tell-tale sample coding "BRE-HJ-D1-1-2020" indicating it is version 1 (D1-1) of a Brewers (BRE) home jersey (HJ).

Outwardly, this home white jersey appears just as it did on the field prior to 2020, even thought the team completely redesigned its uniforms for that season. It is likely this was done before those changes were finalized (or perhaps even considered) so this does not represent what the Brewers actually wore that season.

There are other, smaller details in this sample that were also updated before the full run of 2020 jerseys went into production. First, a heat-pressed neck tag which was not used in on-field jerseys. Next, an interior heat-pressed tag, almost twice as tall as the ones used by Majestic before and Nike after, appears inside the placket with the sample coding. This location was used by Majestic for team tagging, but Nike versions moved these tags below the jock tags on the lower front of the jerseys.

Finally, the "0730" code on the back of the laundry tag is the same used for Majestic's version of the Flex Base template. By the time Nike's jerseys were released in 2020, the product code had been updated to "0890" to reflect the new Nike jerseys, and the Brewers had all-new uniforms to debut that season.

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Brewers struck a sponsor patch deal with Northwestern Mutual, a financial services company. The patches first appeared on September 15, 2023.

The patch is navy with white lettering for the team's home, road, home alternate, and City Connect jerseys. It is white with navy text on the team's road alternate jersey, with a white border in 2023, and a gold border in 2024.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team's normal logo patches remain on each jersey, on the opposite sleeve from the ad patch.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Milwaukee Brewers 1972 Harvey Kuenn Game Worn Coaches' Road Jersey

Examination Date: August 14, 2020 Certification Number: 200814JR1

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Milwaukee Brewers first-year Spalding-made double-knit road blue jersey. "Brewers" Vertically arched on front with the Varsity-style number 60 below on the left chest. 7 7/8" tall Varsity 60 on the back, all lettering in Royal Blue outline with bright gold. V-Neck pullover jersey has two-inch blue/yellow/blue sewn-in knit elastic sleeve ends, and similar colored 7/8 wide knit V-Neck trim.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Spalding Professional manufacturer tagging inside the center of the back tail, with a square embroidered "72" tag beside it, matching exemplars in our database. Spalding made the Brewers' knit road uniforms in 1972 only, and the color was a distinct darker share of blue than the power blue uniforms worn by other teams or even the Brewers in the years after 1972. There is no size tag, but the chest measurement is 42".

Inside the back of the neck are the remnants of what had been a light blue felt rectangular team tag, stitched in place with a tight zig zag. The whole center of the tag is torn away leaving frayed remnants of felt still attached around the perimeter. This is typical of other 1972 Brewers road jerseys we have seen; the felt tags were either cut out or simply disintegrated and fell apart after hundreds of machine washings. In fact, we have never seen one with the collar tagging still intact.

Wear and Repairs: While it is still intact with all seams secure, this jersey shows heavy wear as is typical of surviving 1972 Brewers road uniforms. Some of the finish topstitching on the sleeve and side seams is coming out. The jersey is a shade darker below the belt line where the tail was tucked in, sparing it exposure to the sun. These uniform sets were used in spring training and/or minor leagues for likely several more seasons. The front Brewers wordmark is still tightly stitched with thread lightly wash-faded, and the twill colors are still bright. The player numbers, however, have clearly been replaced with "take off" MLB numbers, a common practice for minor league teams who, when changing numbers on MLB jerseys that were to be reissued, re-used numbers that had been stripped from other jerseys, not new one. The evidence of this shows in the tattered edges of the numbers, even with places where the gold edges of the twill have been torn away from being roughly pulled off of other jerseys. The numbers were applied with a great deal of glue, and stitched multiple times around the edges, including with a set of straight basting stitches (generally laid down first to position the numbers for final sewing) then with as many as two corses of zig-zag stitching.

William F. Henderson

When we first examined this jersey one the light table, it was clear that both numbers had been replaced and were unoriginal to the MLB jersey. The second digit clearly had been a "1", its telltale outline visible in the center opening of the "0" that occupied that spot now. There was also inexactly covered outlines of a prior number in the first position that we could not discern with the current "6" in place. We were asked by its owner to carefully remove the leading "6" on the back to determine the jersey's original configuration. When we did, we saw evidence of the outlines of original number, as well as the unfaded, much darker silhouette of the newly-removed 6. This tells us that while the jersey spent a single year in the sun with its original numbers, it spent two or probably several more seasons in the sun with its replacement numbers in place.

Removal of the 6 clearly showed on the light table that the original number in that spot had been a "3" (see photos) confirming that this jersey had been issued and worn in 1972 by #31, Harvey Kuenn, in his first year as a Brewers coach after having retiring as a player on the team at the start of the 1970 season. In 1982, Coach Kuenn was named manager of the Brewers mid-season and led them to their only World Series berth, and was named AL Manager of the Year. He managed the Brewers through the end of 1983. When he died in 1988, the Brewers wore a commemorative patch for him on their sleeves all year

After verifying the jersey's original player number on the light table, the "6" was carefully repositioned atop the clearly visible shadow outline and restitched as original.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is consistent in every way with known exemplars of game worn 1972 Brewers road jerseys. It exhibits game use and wash wear, with the original front wordmark but numbers on both front and back changed by the minor league team. Therefore, it is my considered opinion of that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Harvey Kuenn of the Milwaukee Brewers during the 1972 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Pete Vuckovich 1986 Milwaukee Brewers Game Worn Road Jersey, Final Season

Examination Date: May 24, 2023 Certification Number:23-0524J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Sand-Kint made road gray size 48 Milwaukee Brewers pullover jersey #50, issued to pitcher Pete Vuckovich in his final MLB season. "Milwaukee" scripted across the front at an angle, with the number 50 below on the left side. The same number is on the back, 6" from the collar with no player name above as was correct for the 1986 Brewers. Wide, 2 1/2" sewn-in kit sleeve end trim in blue/gold/blue. 1" V-Neck knit twin in the same colors. Wisconsin-based Sand Knit was the supplier for the 1986 Brewers, the number font is correct for the that year, and all lettering is stitched in dark Royal Blue over gold. Vuckovich played wearing 2-3" extra length jerseys through almost all of his career, yet this one is standard length. The 1986 SULLY memorial disk is stitched to the left sleeve and it appears original.

Pete Vuckovich did not start the 1986 season on the Brewers roster. Only 33 years old but battling arm problems, he had contemplated retirement. Midseason he accepted a long rehab assignment in AAA Vancouver where he pitched well. The MLB club called him up in September, and in my estimation, this jersey was likely prepared for him hurriedly, perhaps in the clubhouse. The lettering is stitched somewhat sloppily reminiscent of clubhouse work; his name is written in the jersey tail in magic marker and not embroidered, and the jersey does not have the extra length that the player customarily specified for his jerseys his entire career.

Vuckovich appeared in only six games, all as a starter for the 1986 Brewers, in September - October, going 2-4 with only 32.1 innings pitched. He retired at the end of that season, caping an 11 year career in which he appeared in 298 games, and went 93-69 with a career 3.66 ERA. He won the 1982 AL Cy Young Award. (Baseball Almanac) Despite a notable 12-year career as a professional baseball player, in popular culture he is known mainly for his role as fictional Yankees slugger Clu Haywood, the chief nemesis of Charlie Sheen's character Ricky Vaughn, in the popular 1989 film Major League. Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Sand-Knit tagging is sewn to the outside left front tail of the jersey, and properly consists of two tags, stitched on the side edges only, side by side. The left tag is the "Exclusively tailored for the Milwaukee Brewers:, and the right tag is the Sand-Knit/MacGregor locker tag showing the size as 48. Sand Knit changed its tagging frequently over the years, and this tagging set is accurate and specific to 1986. Inside the back tail are two more tags: white knit fabric sewn around all four sides. The left tag 2"x3/4" has 86-48S machine embroidered on it in black thread. This stands for 1986, size 48 with standard tailoring. (Special tailoring was designated with a "Z" in place of the "S"). The second tag is 2 1/2" long and is plain white with "VUCKOVICH" hand-written on it in black marker in handwriting familiar when compared to other Brewers mid-season call-up jerseys. Normally, the player name is also machine embroidered, but multiple examples in our exemplar library have the name hand written, often when the player did not start the season with the club.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows wear that would be in excess of the six games that Vuckovich appeared in for the 1986 Brewers. The lettering is burnished and somewhat frayed around the edges with much

Brewers exemplar tagging- at the top is the tag of the jersey in review. Note "S" designation for standard tailoring and player hame handwritten on a blank white swatch. Below are two other examples from 1986, showing standard team tagging for players on the roster as of the start of the season. The tagging on the Porter jersey shows 42Z; it was made with extra length. The bottom tag is from 1984 and shows an example of another Brewers jersey with a clubhouse handwritten tag, for pitcher Bob Gibson, a mid-May 1984 call-up.

Conclusion: After careful review, in my opinion this jersey is all original and without contrivance. It shows use and is an official team issue. I believe it was issued to and worn by pitcher Pete Vuckovich during his final MLB season in 1986.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Robin Yount 1991 Milwaukee Brewers Home Game Used Jersey

Examination Date: February 9, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0209J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Rawlings 1991 Milwaukee Brewers Robin Yount size 44 (correct for the player) six-button full weight white/blue pinstriped knit jersey. "Brewers" scripted in Royal Blue outlined with gold tackle twill across both panels of the front and underlined. Player number "19" on the left chest and on the back in the proper block with serifs (sometimes called full-block) font in the same colors. Properly with no name on back, all lettering matches our templates in terms of style, colors, placement and outline-widths.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings locker tag sewn on all four sides showing jersey size 44 is placed on the outer, lower left shirt tail. The tag style is correct for 1991, There is no size flag tag in the neck as is generally correct with team issues. Beneath the locker tag is 1/2" x 2 1/2" white twill tag with 91 YOUNT machine embroidered on it, matching exemplars. The Rawlings script logo is embroidered in blue into the end of the right sleeve. There is no special tailoring marked.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering and stitching on the this jersey is unaltered and free of contrivance. It shows very light wash wear, with very mild puckering of the locker tag and the fading/fraying of the small player name/year beneath. All twill lettering is crisp and unblemished with generally un-frayed edges and no evident puckering. There are no signs of any repairs.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly sized, tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was issued to and was worn by Robin Yount of the Milwaukee Brewers during the 1991 season.

Chapter 15

St. Louis Cardinals

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Cardinals Uniform History Notes

- To the casual observer, the Cardinals jersey has remained unchanged for decades, The “Birds on a Bat” logo has existed in different versions since 1924, and is arguably one of the most traditional and recognizable uniform designs in all of American sports. But there are subtle year-to-year uniform jersey changes that we will point out, starting here with the 1970 season.
- Cardinals jerseys through 2002 are made by hometown St. Louis-based Rawlings. Rawlings’ near-exclusive’ relationship with the Cardinals was one of that company’s proudest jewels. While other licensed manufacturers may have made the “Authentic Diamond Collection” jerseys offered for retail sale, the Cardinals exclusive on-field supplier was Rawlings. The Cardinals finally switched to Majestic exclusively in 2003.
- The 1970 flannel Cardinals jersey was identical to those worn by the team since the 1957 season. The logo is intricately chain-stitched directly to the uniform’s front. While two other teams, the Phillies and the Houston Astros, have employed chain stitching for their team wordmark, only the Cardinals’ and Astros’ versions had been directly embroidered. The Phillies embroider their designs onto white cloth patches that are then sewn to the uniform (for 2013, the Astros went back to twill and dropped chain stitching entirely).
- Names on back are used on both home and road jerseys, a practice begun in 1962, rather early compared to other teams.
- In 1971, the Cardinals are one of the earliest teams to adopt double knit uniforms, leaving flannels suddenly behind. Only the Pirates and Orioles had converted ahead of them (1972 was the year than most teams switched). The 1971 home and road jerseys were identical pullovers except for the color of the fabric; white for home, gray for road use. The 1971–1972 jerseys have a rounded crew neck with red/white/blue knit trim. Similar tri-color trim is also sewn on the sleeve ends. Front numbers are a rather tall 5-plus inches, and all numbers and names are in tackle twill, replacing the earlier felt.
- Numbers are always two-color red/navy. Names on back are the same two-color, using a special Rawlings Block through 1988 (also seen on Rawlings jerseys like the Orioles and Royals) then switches to regular Block Condensed for 1989. Extra Condensed used for longer name.
- 1973 jerseys adopt a V-neck design, both home and road
- For 1976, road jerseys change to powder blue, one of the later teams to adopt the trend (along with the 1976 Cubs and 1980 Braves)
- For 1979, the front numbers are removed, and football style “TV numbers” are added to both sleeves, a unique touch. That lasts only two years, and the numbers revert to the jersey fronts. The 1981–1984 jerseys look identical the 1976–1978 versions.
- 1985–1991, the road jersey switches back to gray, looking very much like the 1973–1975 design.
- For 1992, button-front jerseys return to replace the pullovers that had been worn for the prior 21 years. These then remain unchanged through 1996.
- For 1997–1998, front numbers disappear, but return in 1999.
- In 1998, the Birds on a Bat wordmark is refreshed for the first time since 1966. The birds become a bit plumper, their position on the bat shifts slightly, the team name writing a bit thicker/bolder, but the changes are minor and barely noticeable. In 1998 (only), the birds have red beaks and navy feet, eliminating the yellow that had always been used in these two details. The yellow returns to the beak in 1999, the legs remain navy.
- When front numbers return for 1999, they are notably smaller than when last seen in 1996. The Cardinals change front number fonts, and now use the same font (Front Block) for front numbers as several other teams (Marlins, Mets, and White Sox). Again, a subtle change that few would notice.
- The birds are updated again, very slightly, in 2003, prior to a more major refresh for 2013 when the birds are made larger, logo moves up by more than two inches on the jersey front, and front numbers become smaller still.
- In 2013, the Cardinals introduced their first alternate jersey—a cream-colored home design with “St. Louis” across the chest, modeled after a 1932 throwback. The jersey featured red-trimmed placket and sleeves, and a slightly smaller version of the updated Birds on a Bat logo.
- Powder blue returns to the rotation in 2019, with a full blue alternate uniform featuring the “St. Louis” version of the “Birds on a Bat” logo on front.
- The switch to Nike’s Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template eliminates the direct-sewn chain-stitched embroidery for embroidery applied to patches that are sewn to the jersey front.
- 2024 brings a City Connect uniform, marking the first time in team history a red jersey is used as a regular season alternate. The design features a chain-stitched script “The Lou” wordmark over the Birds on a Bat, paying tribute to St. Louis’s local culture and musical roots. The uniform incorporates subtle river-themed pinstripes representing the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, along with a “STL”/fleur-de-lis sleeve patch.

1998: One-year only red beaked jerseys

1999-2012

General Cardinals notes: Compared to other teams, the Cardinals use a very narrow outline (roughly half thickness) around all numbers, front and back.

 The Block NOB font used by the Cardinals in these years is a shorter, bolder variation than standard, with a thin outline to match the numbers. I have named it the "Rawlings Block Alphabet" (see typestyles section).

Cardinals Chain Stitching

Through 2023 the Cardinals' Birds on a Bat logo was embroidered directly on the front of the jersey using a technique called chain stitching, as it has been done for more than 70 years. It is a looped embroidery stitch sewn by a special machine. The thread shines and gives the feeling of real depth to the lettering.

Once used by many teams, only the Cardinals and Phillies have used the technique in recent years, with the Phillies embroidering the logo onto patches that are sewn down, rather than the direct embroidery used by the Cardinals. However, starting in the 2024 season with Nike's new Vapor Premier Elite template, the tradition for both teams changes.

After fighting Nike to retain chain stitching, the Cardinals logos are still rendered this way, but they are sewn to patches that are then stitched to the jersey rather than direct embroidered as before. Starting in 2024, some regular embroidery stitching is mixed in, mostly on outline elements.

The Phillies, for their part, apparently did not put up a similar fight, and their logos are no longer chain stitched, leaving the Cardinals as the sole remaining example of this beautiful, nearly lost art.

A Familiar But Changing Face

One of the most recognizable mascots in all U.S. sports, the Cardinal, has gone through a number of minor changes over the years. These examples are from team spec jerseys only; retail-sale jerseys don't always strictly follow this progression. They tend to be sold until stock is used up, and only then the design changes.

Birds on a Bat - An Interview with Gary Kodner, St. Louis Cardinals Designer

By Phil Hecken

http://www.uni-watch.com/2013/08/08/birds-on-a-bat-an-interview-with-gary-kodner-st-louis-cardinals-designer/

Today I have another really special article for you fine readers. Like many guests whose stories I feature on here, the story of this began with a simple e-mail following a different guest writer's article. This one stemmed from a recent post on the controversy over the "pointed W" on the Washington Senators caps. Reader Oliver Kodner originally sent me this e-mail after reading that article.

"It got under my skin because I know how frustrating it is with MLB, Majestic, New Era, and most other companies who make 'authentic' items that really aren't all that authentic," said Oliver. He further went on to explain that this is not uncommon in MLB. Then came the sections that really piqued my interest:

"It is more common to see incorrect logos these days than correct logos, and it's getting out of hand.

I first started to notice it in Marc Okkonen's book 'Baseball Uniforms of the 20th Century', the same graphics used on Dressed To The Nines. Bill DeWitt III started a major project to ACCURATELY catalog the history of St. Louis Cardinals graphics and this was a good source to start with. However it was noticed how many things Okkonen got wrong. To his credit though, he has put in more research than anyone else in that field, and some inaccuracies are expected. This project has been spinning behind the scenes for about 2 years and the amount of errors, extending way past Okkonen's book, is unbelievable. Unfortunately my knowledge stretches just to the Cardinals organization, as I have seen XL sized binders of logos and uniform designs being created."

"What we're finding these days is that Majestic themselves are making merchandise that doesn't look a damn thing like the real graphics. We're seeing things like this, where the birds are way too small, and the bird on the right is too far away from everything. Or these birds. I see those birds come into Busch every single home game. The bad graphics and bad merchandise is coming straight from the top, from Majestic and MLB.

One of the problems here is that MLB doesn't care. When the Cardinals went to MLB to fix the jerseys for 2013, we kind of had to push and shove to show Majestic and MLB how their stitching of the jerseys before 2013 was wrong. Even when trying to update the style guide, MLB pushed it aside and failed to see what the problem was. It took a lot of work to get inside MLB's ear and tell them what they were posting on their style guide was wrong, and their response to all of this was something along the lines of, "there are 30 teams in MLB, and you guys are the only ones who seem to care this much about it."

"OK," I thought, "this guy is a fountain of knowledge and this is totally worth pursuing." I e-mailed Oliver back and asked him if he could get in touch with the Cardinals' "go-to" designer.

Oliver immediately replied with, "I talked to Bill's go-to graphic designer a few seconds ago, he's my father."

Fantastic! This is going to be a gem of an article I mused, and I was not disappointed. I asked Oliver if he could "interview" his father and provide an article detailing everything we'd discussed, and he has obliged. One last bit from Oliver before the article as a final setup:

I know about it first hand watching my dad work with Bill DeWitt and exchanging numerous phone calls and emails with Major League Baseball about getting the graphics correct. Being able to watch my father work with Bill DeWitt on these projects for the past 15 years or so, and see him accurately recreate historical graphics provided me with a lot of knowledge on the subject of St. Louis Cardinals graphics. After contacting you, you recommended that this would be a good story to write about, so I went to my father and told him that no one has really heard his story.

To this point not many people know who the freelance graphic designer is that has been working with the Cardinals since his days in the 80s at Busch Creative. He wrote up those paragraphs about his work directly with the organization starting in 1997 with the rebranding project. And is still working with the organization on numerous projects today. He sounds pretty level headed and articulate by the way he writes, but this is a man who has always referred to himself as a "simple caveman artist."

So, with that, please sit back and enjoy a chat with ……

Gary Kodner Interview

by Oliver Kodner

"It's an honor and privilege to design for the best franchise in baseball, the St. Louis Cardinals. And it helps to have a client who shares my interest in tradition, design, application, and preservation of a great brand. It also helps to be working with one of the most colorful and successful franchises in MLB history."

–Gary Kodner

The Birds on Bat

The "Birds on Bat" is one of the most recognized and prominent graphics in all of sports. It is synonymous with a great and storied franchise. Originally called the Perfectos in 1899 and out-fitted with red striped stockings along with red-trimmed uniforms, sportswriter Willie McHale overheard a fan remark, "what a lovely shade of cardinal. The name caught on when McHale used this new nickname in his column. In 1900 the team officially changed their name to Cardinals, however it wasn't until 1922 that a Cardinal bird first appeared on a uniform. The birds have remained on the front of the jersey to this day, with the exception of the 1956 season.

From 1922 through 2013 there were many changes to the birds on bat, some intentional, some accidental. A study of history will reveal that some changes were due to the manufacturing process, change in vendor, or evolutionary drift. These circumstances occurred through the early years as well as modern times. A prominent example being from 2002 to 2011, as Rawlings and Majestic were both used to create what was supposed to be the same graphic on the jersey.

The birds have had a red beak, a yellow beak, pointed and round beaks. The bat has been black and it has been yellow. The birds have perched in different angles and positions, and the rendering of the birds has evolved throughout history. But the basic design of the jersey remains intact.

How I Got Involved

In 1997 I was contacted by Bill DeWitt III to consult with him on his idea and desire to refresh and contemporize the Cardinals catalog of logos. He had already kicked off a design process with MLB and sought my input on the preliminary designs that were being presented. Rather than critique some one else's work, or tell a designer in New York how to design the Cardinals logo, I suggested that we design the logo here in St. Louis. Bill and I would work through the details, draw the birds, and present the new logo to the Cardinals ownership and MLB for approval and adoption.

There are a few reasons why the Cardinals went through a branding update in 1997 and '98. One, a new ownership group headed by the DeWitt Family acquired the Cardinals. Two, the logo graphics throughout the catalog were inconsistent. Different Birds were being used for various logo applications; primary logo, uniform logo, print logo, etc. And third, merchandising. The Cardinals needed graphics that would be stronger on various apparel applications and promotional merchandise.

In 1998 when the Cardinals first donned the new current design, the beaks were red. I argued that real Cardinal birds have red beaks, not yellow. I won that argument for only one season as we changed back to yellow beaks in 1999. We also made the birds legs thinner. In 2013 the birds became larger, and a new computerized process allowed the embroidery to become more accurate and include details in the eyes and bat that had been left out in previous years due to the limited ability of older stitching capabilities. Due to the hand embroidery technique the Cardinals have traditionally used, the birds on bat was simplified. Details such as the birds eye, the lines on the bat barrel and knob are less detailed than the print version. The updated technology being used in 2013 lead to a gorgeous reproduction of the graphic that is still chain stitched onto the jersey.

Another "tweak" to the logo catalog will come with the single bird on bat graphic. We designed an alternate version where the bat is rotated counter clockwise to create more of an X shape design. This provides greater balance to this logo for use other than its placement on the two tone, red brimmed "Sunday Cap."

Something that often isn't talked about is our minor league affiliates. They're graphic identities are just as important to the big league club and a winning tradition. The Springfield Cardinals and Palm Beach Cardinals graphics were updated sometime around 1999 or 2000 to follow and emulate the graphics of the updated Cardinals.

Creating a Historical Catalog

Uniforms of the past are often lost to history. Few are kept, but many are known by archival black and white photographs. Those that have survived are often bleached and tattered. Tracing the Cardinals uniform history takes us back to pre-1900. Uniforms were far different in those days. They lacked color, variety, special emblems, etc. Like most teams of that era, the Cardinals featured a "type only" solution for the jersey. Simple block fonts or a fancier Victorian, Celtic, or Olde English looking fonts were used.

Recent years have experienced a resurgence in the use of old and nostalgic graphics. MLB features a Cooperstown Collection in their style guide catalog. Many merchandise licensees have created a variety of products, mostly apparel that feature nostalgic Cardinals graphics. This has not only spawned renewed interest and merchandising opportunities it has also produced a number of misrepresentations, mistakes, and poor graphics that lack accuracy to the originals.

Most fans who are not familiar with the original graphics often end up buying and wearing something that is far less than authentic. The Cardinals, under DeWitt's leadership and persistence have set out to restoring authenticity and respect for historical accuracy. This will be accomplished by two major initiatives. One, acquiring vintage uniforms for their museum collection, and two, researching each uniform and graphic so they can be redrawn using contemporary digitized techniques. These newly created, correct and authentic, graphics can be accurately displayed and reproduced.

We all owe a lot to Mark Okkonen, who has done the most research and brought us closer to authenticity of MLB uniforms of the past. His catalog of illustrations and documentation give us a solid platform to build on when we embark on recreating an accurate history of the logos and uniforms. The Cardinals historic catalog took more than a year to produce. Working closely with Cardinals president and their museum curators, digital vector drawings were created of each Cardinals logos and emblems that appeared on uniform jerseys, jackets and sweaters, caps, sleeve patches, and pins. All done with the purpose of restoring historic accuracy, a respect for Cardinals tradition, and an insistence that the vendors, merchandisers, and MLB would get it right.

Wow. And there you have it readers. Fantastic job by both Oliver and his dad, Gary. And a tremendous "Thank You!" from me is due for this interview. We here at Uni-Watch greatly appreciate ALL you do and a tip of the cap to the St. Louis Cardinals organization for having such caring and quality people working for the club.

My thanks to friends Paul Lukas of Uni-Watch and ESPN, and writer Phil Hecken. You can read the original article here: http://www.uni-watch.com/2013/08/08/birds-on-a-bat-an-interview-with-gary-kodner-st-louis-cardinals-designer/

Cardinals Back Number Outlining through 2023

Starting in 2024, Cardinals back numbers are standardized by Nike and no longer feature this trait.

Cardinals number outlining: This is a fine point, and that's what this Guide is about. Numbers below illustrate the Cardinals' uniform-back number outlining rules. The numeral on the left, "A," is a standard number with a typical outline, used by most teams. Numeral "B" in the center is the pattern that the Cardinals use. Note that the dark outline is exactly the same size on both of these numbers "A" and "B." The difference is on "B" that the red layer has been made just slightly bolder, so it covers up more of the outline layer it is sewn over. For comparison, the number on the right, "C" is commonly and incorrectly rendered for a Cardinals jersey. Here, the red layer is the same as "A," and the dark outline is simply made thinner. Front numbers get 1/8" outlines too, even though the front numbers are smaller.

A

As used by other teams with this font: Standard 7 ½" red number with standard ¼" outline

B

Correct Cardinals design: slightly bold 7 ¾" (or so) red number with narrower, 1/8"- 5/32" navy outline

C

Having trouble seeing it? Look at the shape of these two open spaces, comparing examples B & C.

Incorrect but often seen: Standard (un-bold) number with narrow 1/8" outline

The Ebb and Flow of the Birds on a Bat Wordmark

1987– 3 ½” from shoulder seam to top of bird’s head

1989 – 4”

2000 – 5”

2013 – 3 3/4”

- At first I thought it might be an illusion caused by players wearing their uniforms more loose and baggy than the old days. But finally I had to check and see for myself. Measurements from the top of the shoulder seam proved that the position of the ‘Birds on a Bat’ wordmark that adorns the front of every Cardinals jersey had indeed been drooping lower and lower with each passing year. See for yourself.
- Read this excellent interview of Cardinals President Bill DeWitt by Paul Lukas. Your author would like to imagine that his publication had some small part in the Cardinals’ jersey wordmark restoration, whether it is true or not.

1970 Home

The Cardinals flannel home jersey is identical dating back to 1957, its first year of use in this version. It features the beautifully embroidered “Birds on a Bat” team logo with two-color felt player numbers front and back.

Player names have been used on Cardinals’ jerseys since 1962. The lettering font is Rawlings’ own version of Block, which is common to the other teams’ uniforms made by Rawlings (like the Orioles).

Cardinals game jerseys of the 60s and 70s are heavily recycled through the minor leagues, and thus have usually had the original player names and numbers stripped from them, meaning most jerseys seen today have been restored.

- Cardinals flannel road jerseys of 1970 are identical to their home jerseys with the exception of the color of the jersey fabric being gray instead of cream color.
- St. Louis-based Rawlings had long been exclusive supplier of Cardinals uniforms, a tradition that had continued for decades, and ended only when the Cardinals switched to Majestic in 2003, two years ahead of the league-wide switch.

The Cards adopt double knits a year earlier than most other teams. Only the Pirates and Orioles switched sooner. The jersey collar and sleeves have red/white/blue trim. The collar is a rounded crew-neck for these two years only. Notice the flat-bottom shirt tails. Front numbers are extra tall 5". NOB is in special Cardinals Block Font, and red numbers are slightly bolder than regular, with a narrower-than-usual navy blue outline.

The Cards adopt double knits in 1971, a year earlier than most teams, only slightly behind the Pirates and Orioles. Road grays are a very pale gray, almost looking like a dirty white. Jersey collar and sleeves have red/white/blue knit trim. The collar in these two years only is a rounded crew-neck. Notice the flat-bottomed shirt tails. Front numbers are extra tall. Nearly all examples in the hobby today have had their names on back replaced, as the Cardinals stripped them all on their way to the minor leagues. The Torre example on this page appears to have a name on back that is a bit too tall compared to original.

NOB is in special Cardinals Block Font, Rawlings' "house font" (also used by the Orioles) and all numbers are slightly bolder than regular, with a narrower-than-usual navy blue outline.

Front numbers during this period are rather large, back numbers continue in slightly-bold with narrow outline format, as explained at the start of this chapter. Rawlings Block names are just under 3" tall. 1998 Wordmark Change: Home and Road

1998 redesign: only year with red beaks and yellow eyes, home and road

In 1998, the Cardinals logo undergoes a modernization, after 40 seasons of stability:

- Prior to 1998, the left bird's tail is in front of the bat and the right bird's tail is behind. That order is switched in 1998.
- The pre-1998 birds had yellow legs outlined with navy. Post 1998 birds have navy-only legs. In 1998 only the birds have red beaks. The beaks go back to yellow in 1999.
- The shape and appearance of the birds changes. They are slightly shorter and fatter .
- 1998 jerseys, like 1997, have no numbers on the front. Front numbers return for 1999. Pre-1998, front numbers are 4 ¾". Starting 1999 they are 3 ¾".

Click here for a link to the actual Letter of Opinion

1998 jerseys have a special cachet among collectors because it was the year the Mark McGwire broke the single-season home run record. During that time, dozens of McGwire "game worn" jerseys were optimistically listed on auction sites at any one time, surely many of them were not game worn.

1999

An ultra tiny detail—but worth pointing out since Majestic did not reliably year tag Cardinals jerseys in 2003–2004. Up through 2003, notice the wide shadow at the knob of the bat. Starting in 2004, the pattern changes and the line in that spot is noticeably narrower.

2000

The 1998 redesign is modified only slightly, with the change of the birds' beaks back to yellow and the eyes to white, after unfavorable fan reaction. Rawlings remains the Cardinals' on-field supplier through 2002, but in 2003 it moves to Majestic for all uniforms, both for on-field jerseys and retail authentics.

Note Extra Condensed lettering for a longer name.

Up through 2002: Year and size flags, team tagging is sewn inside the shirt tail, not visible from the outside. 2003 and after: Majestic tagging is on the outside of the shirt tail with a simple year flag beside the size flag.

2013 Jersey Changes, Close-Up

After being freshened for 1998, the "Birds on a Bat" wordmark is refreshed again for 2013. There are numerous changes made to the jersey that frankly only a purist would notice. The birds get plumper and gain black pupils in their previously white eyes. The whole logo is made noticeably larger and is moved up a full 2 ¼" higher on the chest, bringing it back to where it had been placed last in 1987. Front numbers are made even smaller to deemphasize them, shrinking another ¼" to 3 ½". Your author approves wholeheartedly of the changes made, but messing with anything on the Cardinals' uniforms seems to rankle fans, and some post-announcement comments on web forums were strongly opposed, saying that the birds now looked too cartoonish.

Our favorite blog, Uni-Watch, printed an outstanding interview with Cardinals' designer Gary Kodner on these changes and some history of this iconic logo. With permission, this entire article is reprinted near the start of this chapter.

While to the untrained eye it appears that the 2013 jersey is identical to the 2012 version, there are several changes, all highlighted in detail on the previous pages. In brief, compared to 2012, the birds are larger and more clearly defined, the logo is moved 2 ¾" higher on the jersey front, the front numbers are ¼" smaller. While Majestic and Nike QR code tagging is used, an old-timey touch is added on team issued jerseys with the player's last name embroidered in script on the right front shirt tail, done by the team, not the manufacturer. The jersey back continues on unchanged, with the same special "slightly bold" Cardinals numbers with their extra-narrow outlines. The Cardinals unveil their first alternate jersey, a home flannel-look cream-colored Cool Base version with “St. Louis” spelled out across the front. It is designed to resemble the 1932 team jersey that last featured the city’s name (pictured inset) and includes 1940s-style red knit trim on the placket and sleeve-ends.

It is designated to be worn during Saturday home games only. At announcement time, the team claimed that the Cardinals had been one of only four MLB teams that had never worn an alternate jersey, naming the Yankees, Dodgers and Tigers as the other three. Readers of this book know for sure that the Tigers (1995) and Dodgers (1999) did in fact both wear an alternate jersey in their recent histories. The new jersey also features the same 2013 enhancements to the birds on a bat logo as highlighted on previous pages. Front numbers are a new, smaller 3 ½” on all jerseys in 2013. In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 1020% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of old.

Almost 40 years after disappearing from the Cardinals' uniform rotation, powder blue makes a resounding comeback in 2019, one of a handful of similarly hued jersey making a nostalgic return around the big leagues. The Cards' new blue entry is identical to their cream home alternate save for the color of the Flex Base jersey itself. The recent "St. Louis Birds on Bat" chain stitched logo appears on front, with all other lettering, front and back, in red/blue. Red knit trim is sewn near both sleeve ends and the collar/placket. The jersey is paired with matching blue pants, offering a complete alternate uniform look rather than a stand-alone jersey to be paired with existing pants. Majestic is manufacturer for 2019 only, Nike takes over in 2020. Note the style code changes from SCAU for Majestic to SCH9 for Nike.

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

2024 Home

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Cardinals classic home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The front numbers are also now smaller version of the back numbers, rather than their own, distinct font as in years past. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the Cardinals "birds on bat" and lettering is also made slightly smaller so that the design can still split between the "r" and the "d" of the script. Most disappointing, is that the "Birds on Bat" chain stitching is now applied to a jersey-color patch which is sewn to the jersey, rather than directly embroidered to the jersey front as in years past. This style has been used on the team's BP jerseys for years, but Nike's drive toward simplification and speed finally forced the changes on the game jerseys as well. Luckily, in a nice nod to tradition, the team still embroiders the player name on the front, right tail. The Cardinals do not use perforated numbers on their home jerseys in 2024. The 2024 jersey included the Whitey Herzog memorial patch, first as a heat-pressed transfer starting on May 17, and moving to an embroidered patch on June 22.

2024-2025 City Connect

The Cardinals and Nike fit a lot of storytelling into the team's City Connect identity, as is the custom for most teams. Rather than explain it ourselves, let's hear what they had to say about this new style in these excerpts from their joint press release:

- Jersey Front—Birds on the Bat and "The Lou": Featuring a modern take on the traditional "Birds on the Bat", the chain-stitched jersey lettering showcases a familiar nickname for St. Louis that gained mainstream popularity through use by STL-native and Grammy Award-winning rapper Nelly.
- Lower Jersey & Cap Lettering: Reviving a classic Cardinals font, the "STL" cap and "ST. LOUIS CARDINALS" lower jersey font pay homage to the team's 1920–1921 jersey lettering, the final seasons before the "Birds on the Bat" were introduced.
- Circle Arm Patch: The sleeve patch is a salute to The Lou's two most enduring historic symbols: the fleur-de-lis commemorating St. Louis' French founding and heritage, along with a civic icon, the Gateway Arch.
- Jersey & Pants River Pinstripes: Introducing a new twist on a traditional baseball uniform standard, the river pinstripes represent St. Louis' historic role as a river city, situated at the confluence of the Missouri and the mighty Mississippi. It marks the first use of pinstripes on a Cardinals uniform since 1929.
- 1882 Inside Collar: Commemorating the official birth of the franchise through the founding of the American Association's St. Louis Brown Stockings, the jersey features a vintage "1882" on the inner collar.
- Red Jersey: The team's City Connect jerseys marks the first time in franchise history that a red jersey is being produced for regular season play.

The team uses perforated numbers for this style of jersey. The 2024 version has the Whitey Herzog memorial patch. Carryover City Connect jerseys are not updated in 2025, despite updates to the team's other jerseys for the 2025 season.

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025. This is the case for the Cardinals, which is especially visible in the front numbers, which are a separate font from the back numbers. In 2024, the front numbers were just smaller versions of the back set. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025. This is the case for the Cardinals, which is especially visible in the front numbers, which are a separate font from the back numbers. Cardinals Home Team Tagging

The Cardinals stayed loyal for decades to St. Louis-based manufacturer Rawlings, who took pride in stitching the Cards' uniforms (including all player numbers and names). Finally, in the 2003 season, St. Louis finally switched to Majestic and away from "The Mark of a Pro."

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1980-1984 Blue Batting Practice

The Cards wear navy blue batting practice jerseys for several years in the early 1980s, then wear similar looking—but not identica—navy blue BP jerseys again in the 1990s. In a rare departure from their exclusive relationship with Rawlings, these early Cardinals BP jerseys are made by Majestic. This style jersey is worn between 1980–1984. They have Majestic Varsity two-color (red/white) numbers on the back and no names. Notice the sleeve and neck trim is a sewn-on thin red/white knit braid.

The Majestic jerseys at top are from the early 1980s (probably 1983 or 1984); Sand-Knit version is below. Notice the slightly less ornate front logo and the Majestic Varsity font numbers used on the back, compared to the Sand-Knit jersey variations, below: more ornate front logo and Rawlings' Block/Serifs number font.

The jersey at right is from 1986, made by Sand-Knit, and carries an Exclusively made for the St. Louis Cardinals tag. Notice the odd shape of the 1, probably a Sand-Knit-specific in-house pattern.

Examples of the red "STL" batting practice jersey are made by Rawlings, Russell, Majestic, and Sand-Knit. Not all manufacturers supplied the team in all years. These jerseys feature the two-color logo on the front. In two variations of design, some jerseys have the logo made from two-layered tackle twill; others have it embroidered with thread on a cloth backing. Numbers on back are in Cardinals style of Block, names are two-color and only sometimes with nameplates and sometimes without. Names on back appear in 1987, at least when used in the regular season. Rawlings uses mesh nameplates.

The Cardinals wore a memorial for owner August Busch in 1990. It is likely the armband on this 1989 BP jersey means it was reissued and used in 1990, at least in spring training.

Late 1980s Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

In the late 1980s, Majestic offered this zip neck, short-waisted alternate mesh warmup jersey to all MLB teams. It featured elastic at the waist, wide knit trim at the collar and the sleeve ends and small slash pockets. The "STL" logo on the left chest is an embroidered patch. While some players may have worn these, it was not a popular choice and we have never seen a team-player lettered example.

1993-1996 Road Batting Pratice

These navy jerseys are worn between 1993–1996, made by both Rawlings and Russell, and have two-color Block numbers. When names are used they are single-color white, both on nameplates and direct sewn. Notice that the knit sleeve and collar trim is red, white and blue, different from the trim used on the 1980–1984 blue batting practice jersey.

Steve Kraljic collection

Red mesh fabric with navy blue knit trim on front and sleeve ends. On Cardinals game worn BP jerseys, the lettering is chain stitched embroidery, just like game jerseys, applied to a white background patch. On store-bought versions, even those tagged “authentic,” the lettering is usually a plainer (cheaper), machine-stitched non-chain stitched embroidery. Two-color name and number, white/navy. Player nameplates used.

© GameWornGuides.com

2003-2006 Batting Practice

Softer, non-mesh fabric, the earliest version of a tech fabric. It fades in the sun and when washed, and quickly collects fabric pulls. Chain stitched embroidery applied to a white patch that is sewn to the jersey. Blue piping inset along sleeve-top seams.
Two-color name and number, white/navy. Nameplates used.

There are blue variants of this style jersey floating around. I do not believe these were ever worn by the MLB Cardinals, despite the fact that they have an “0065” coded Majestic tag on the inside seam. This particular one was sent to me for authentication, and while it shows some wash wear, a scan of the player name and number fonts used on the back overlaid with the official team template do not match. There is also no use of a nameplate as is found on the red version. To date I have never seen a period photo of a MLB player wearing this jersey. I suspect they were either an unused proposed variant or were made for minor league use.

2007-2010 Batting Practice

Taking part in the all-MLB 2007 batting practice jersey makeover, from a distance, the Cardinals' new jersey looks very much like it has in years past. However, it is now a Cool Base ultra-sheer fabric with a one-button neck design, the front insignia is a textured appliqué, two-color names and numbers are all heat pressed on, not sewn or embroidered. Jersey has a full-length navy blue side panel that stops before the end of the sleeve. Very lightweight perhaps, but it looks and feels cheap with its iron-on lettering.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Batting Practice

All of MLB changes to button-front batting practice jerseys for 2011, and the Cardinals make the change along with the rest.

Nothing much changes from the 2007–2010 version. The side panels continue in solid navy blue, though the panel now extends completely under the sleeve.

The front emblem is an embroidered patch sewn on white twill. It is not chain stitched like the game jerseys. The Majestic jock tag on the front tail is now a sewn patch with the Cardinals' cap logo incorporated in a blue disk.

2014-2015 Batting Practice

MLB redesigns all team batting practice jerseys for the 2014 season, but the Cardinals' changes are minimal. Knit sleeve and collar trim featuring a blue stripe is added, and the new-style blue side panels begin higher up on the side and continue up completely through to the sleeve ends. The front design is a embroidered (but not chain stitched) applique, and back numbers and name are sewn white over navy twill. The new style Majestic jock tag with the alternate team logo is sewn to the tail, and the new style majestic "M" is applied to the left sleeve end.

2016 Spring Training

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the pre-season. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Cardinals use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, reminiscent of their regular-season batting practice jerseys as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill/blue. The Cardinals are the only team to carry the special twill to the front numbers as well, here represented in white patterned twill/blue. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "FL" representing where the Cardinals spend Spring Training.

2016-2023 “Spring Training-Style” Batting Practice

The Cardinals opted to issue these spring training-model jerseys starting in 2016 for pregame activities instead of the standard Majestic ¾ sleeve BP jerseys worn by most other teams. All player lettering is outlined with navy blue and the white twill has a sublimated pattern listing all the team’s World Championship years. The 2019 version of the jersey has the MLB 150 patch on the right sleeve. Made by Majestic 2016–2019, Nike takes over 2020–2023. Note the change in style code from SCAS (Majestic) to SC3S (Nike).

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before.

The Cardinals again use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, reminiscent of their regular-season BP jerseys as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The Cardinals are the only team to carry the special twill to the front numbers as well, here represented in white patterned twill/blue. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “FL” representing where the Cardinals spend Spring Training.

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys.

Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Cardinals jersey is red with red back and blue underarm gussets. The single "cardinal on bat" logo, from their alternate cap, appears on the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in white/blue Block on the left sleeve.

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts in one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The Cardinals use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, a red jersey with their iconic "Birds on Bat" logo sewn on a patch on front rather than directly embroidered. The name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. The Cardinals are the only team to use the special twill on the front numbers as well, here represented in white patterned twill/blue. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "FL" representing their Spring Training home.

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns. The 2019 numbers are white with navy outlines. The Cardinals use a jersey design not included in their regular-season standard game set. It is a red jersey with their iconic "Birds on Bat" logo sewn on a patch on front rather than directly embroidered, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "FLA," referencing their Spring Training home. The player name and front and back numbers are white/blue twill.

2020-2023 Spring Training

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill. For 2020, the Cardinals use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, a red jersey with their iconic "Birds on Bat" logo sewn on a patch on front rather than directly embroidered, with white/blue name, and white/blue front and back numbers.

1997 Turn Back the Clock to 1982

Bill Henderson Collection

- One must give the Cardinals credit for being much more history-conscious than most other teams. This early Turn Back the Clock uniform is incredibly accurate compared to the original, with the help of long time supplier Rawlings, which actually made the original jerseys in 1982 and the reproduction used on June 17,1997.
- Notice how this 1997 Turn Back the Clock example uses the old 3" Cardinals (Rawlings) Block name font, with no nameplate, as would have been done in 1982. It also sports the 1982-correct Ken Boyer black memorial armband.
- The Cards played the Brewers that day, who wore recreations of their 1982 pinstriped home uniforms, in a rematch of their 1982 World Series pairing.

July 4, 1997: As part of Major League Baseball's year-long salute to Jackie Robinson's 50th anniversary of integrating baseball in 1947, the Cardinals invite the Pirates for a Negro Leagues Tribute game in St. Louis. The Cardinals dress as the Negro League's St. Louis Stars, and the Pirates dress as the Homestead Grays. Rawlings made the Cardinals' uniforms of knit fabric with simple twill lettering, minimal trim and longish sleeves. Rawlings tag in both the neck (with size) and inside the left front tail. Game was played June 18, 2005 in Tampa vs. the Devil Rays. 2005's throwback knits are made by Mitchell and Ness, and they are fairly accurate reproductions of the originals. The Cardinals script used by Mitchell & Ness is not quite correct as it has slightly less spacing and is a little bolder, compared to the earlier 1997 Turn Back the Clock Rawlings jersey, which has the benefit of having been made by the original 1980s manufacturer.

Retail versions of this jersey have the text on the date tag in red stitching, while team issued jerseys have it in black.

2007 Civil Rights Game

March 31—An exhibition game, this contest was played between the Indians and Cardinals in Memphis, TN at AutoZone Park the day before the start of the regular season.

Players wore special uniforms that bore the Civil Rights Game patch on the left sleeve, but featured only the team's city name on the front. The Cardinals jerseys are white with a bold red St. Louis on the front; the Indians' grays had a plain, blue Cleveland sewn there. These uniforms were not made to copy any specific style of past uniform.

No player names are on the back, and player numbers are large Block style and also one-color.

From a MLB press release:

"The Major League Baseball Civil Rights Game Presented by AutoZone, which will be held annually, will pay tribute to one of our country's most significant eras of social change and honor Major League Baseball's involvement in the historic struggle through which legendary African-American players broke barriers and made important contributions to American society. The inaugural Civil Rights Game Presented by AutoZone will be played on March 31st, 2007, at AutoZone Park in Memphis, Tenn., home of the Triple-A Memphis Redbirds"

2007 Special Opening Series Gold Trimmed

Bill Henderson Collection

These jerseys were worn only in the first three games of the 2007 season vs. the Mets, to celebrate the Cardinals winning the 2006 World Series. They are like the regular home jerseys in every way except that they have an additional gold layer of twill surrounding the player numbers and player name on back. There is no change to the team logo script. The change subtle and is hardly visible from more than ten feet away. The Cardinals 2006 World Series Champs patch is sewn on the left sleeve. The MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back of the neck is also edged in gold.

2007 Turn Back the Clock to 1972

Jason Scott Collection

These uniforms were worn on May 11, 2007 at San Diego against the 1972-attired Padres. They are gray Majestic pullovers and feature a rounded crew neck which the Cards wore only in 1971–1972 before switching to V-necks for 1973. That part is an impressive detail. However, quite unimpressively they feature incorrect front art which is a variant of the 1998 and later birds on a bat wordmark, incorrectly embroidered on a white patch sewn to the jersey front instead of being directly embroidered as would have been correct. This is quite likely the 2007 batting practice jersey's wordmark and was surely done as a cost saving measure. Only two months later, this same patch was sewn on the 1982 Turn Back the Clock blue jersey worn in Milwaukee that is shown in horrendous detail two pages ahead.

Left: Identify the 2007 version from the nearly identical 2006 edition by the small flag tag on the AIS label. Fabric is a slightly lighter shade of gray.

Road game played August 3, 2007 as the 1928 Negro league St. Louis Stars, in Washington, D.C., against the Nationals, who dressed as the 1940s Negro League Grays. AIS knit uniforms look identical to those used in the 2003 and 2006 contests shown on prior pages, though many of this year's have a small flag tag under the AIS front tag.

2007 Turn Back the Clock to 1982

Jason Scott Collection

On August 14, 2007 the Cardinals and Brewers reprised the look of the 1982 World Series between their two teams by dressing in period uniforms. Judgmentally, I will call this the worst-ever effort of TBTC outfitting in MLB history. Starting with the most egregious offenses first, the Cardinals jersey featured the birds on a bat sewn onto a white patch, creating a thick non-authentic white outline around the team design. They used the wrong version of the birds on the bat, choosing the 1998 and later artwork as compared to the earlier, period-correct design. The sleeve end stripes were almost comic in their over-sizing, equally as wide as the pants' waistbands. Likely the same material was used for both. Sleeves were much too long. Finally, the 1982 Ken Boyer memorial armband was missing from the TBTC jersey

Compare these jerseys to the Rawlings TBTC jerseys worn by the Cardinals in 1997 (shown several pages back) recreated with pride by Rawlings, their original manufacturer from 1982. Those are dead-on accurate replicas.

2008 St. Patrick's Day

Jason Scott Collection

After a year hiatus, the Cardinals return to wearing green jerseys for St. Patrick's Day, 2008. This version mirrors the then-current, one-button BP jersey template, rendered in green rather than the usual red with white side panels, replacing the typical blue. White/blue name and number sewn on back. The Cardinals logo is embroidered on a patch, which is then sewn on front. Unlike the batting practice jersey from this period, which use heat-applied appliqués for logos and letting, the birds on a bat logo and name and number are all sewn on.

The Cardinals and Indians matched up for Major League Day in Cleveland on June 13, 2009, recreating the 1988 jerseys from the film Major League. This time Majestic did a nice job with the replicas, though the players mostly wore the uniforms far baggier than any players would have been caught dead doing in the 1980s!

2010 Civil Rights Game (1947 Road)

Jason Scott Collection

The Cardinals and the Reds matched up for the 2010 Civil Rights game on 5/15/2010. No longer an exhibition contest, this was a regular season scheduled game. Both teams wore knit replicas of their uniforms from 1947, signifying the year of racial integration of MLB. The Cardinals' uniform was beautiful and accurate in every way, down to the chain stitching used to create the birds on a bat front art.

2011-2013 St. Patrick's Day

2011–2013 version of the green jersey is button-front with white side panels and a white panel above the player name. Front wordmark/logo is the same patch as sewn on the normal red batting practice jerseys. Names and numbers on back are white twill outlined with navy blue.

In 2011, some of the St. Patrick's Day shirts don't have sewn-on NOBs, but instead have heat-pressed letters like those used on the 2007–2010 BP jerseys. The pictured Adron Chambers jersey is an example of the heat-pressed numbers. I'm assuming that's something they did on the fly for the younger players who perhaps weren't anticipated to still be around by March 17.

2011 Hispanic Heritage (Road)

Jason Scott Collection

When the Brewers hosted Hispanic Heritage night at Miller Park on June 11, 2011, they invited the visiting Cardinals to play along. The Brewers uniform script for these events reads "Cerveceros," Spanish for "brewers of beer." The Cardinals uniforms that night read "Cardenales," Spanish for "Cardinals." Except for the different script (which was nicely chain stitched just as one would hope) these suits were identical in every other way to their regular road gray uniforms.

Jason Scott Collection

On July 2, 2011 the Tampa Bay Rays played host to the St. Louis Cardinals in a Turn Back the Clock game. The Rays, with little team history to draw on, dressed as the Tampa Smokers of the 1951 Class B Florida Instructional League.

The Cardinals uniforms are an absolute work of art by Majestic, as you can see here, when compared to an original 1952 Cardinals jersey.

Chain stitching is used for the entire front design. And while these reproductions were rendered in modern full-weight double knit, instead of old-time flannel, and lacked the zipper front of the originals, I give these an A for authenticity. Many (though not all) Cardinals players actually wore their pants and socks like they would have in 1951. Bravo!

2011 Negro Leagues Tribute (1931 St. Louis Stars)

Jason Scott Collection

This contest pitted the Cardinals against the Pirates on July 23, 2011 in Pittsburgh. The teams dressed as Negro League contestants; the Cardinals as the 1931 St. Louis Stars (road jersey) and the Pirates as the 1935 Homestead Grays, in home uniforms. The uniforms were made by AIS and seemed to be reasonably good replicas, comparing to the fuzzy photos that are available of the 1931 Stars.

2011 Turn Back the Clock to 1985

Jason Scott Collection

The jersey you received was worn during the Friday, August 26th 2011 game. The throwback 1985 jerseys were worn to honor Willie McGee during his bobblehead night, with the fan favorite center-fielder throwing out the first pitch while accompanied by Ozzie Smith and Vince Coleman. During that game the Cardinals beat the Pirates in dramatic fashion 5-4, with an 8th inning, 2-run homer by Lance Berkman. This was a game that catapulted the Cardinals into their memorable September run that lead into October with the organization's 11th World Championship.

This jersey is game worn, authenticated and autographed by the player or coach.

PAPA JOHN'S Better Ingredients. Better Pizza.

August 26, 2011: The Cardinals played the Pirates and gave fans a Willie McGee bobblehead figure. Majestic clearly has the "drill" perfected by now, as its Cardinals Turn Back the Clock replica jerseys were perfect in execution, except that, again, the players wore them two sizes too big (while probably the players in the 1980s wore them two sizes too small).

Jason Scott Collection

Several years prior, when they became MLB champs in 2006, the Cards opened the 2007 season wearing jerseys (shown on a prior page) that had player names and numbers trimmed in gold as a subtle celebration. Perhaps too subtle, as the highlighting could not be noticed from more than a few feet away.

That was certainly addressed with the 2012 edition of the celebration jerseys. Everything that is normally red (except the birds themselves) was changed to metallic gold outlined with navy blue, including the chain stitched Cardinals wordmark. Hard to read from the seats? Too bad. This was their party. Worn two games, April 13–14.

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1982 (Home)

August 4, the Cardinals hosted a two-game series against the visiting Milwaukee Brewers, commemorating the 30th anniversary of the 1982 World Series meeting between the two teams. For this game, the Brewers wore replicas of their 1982 powder blue road uniforms. These Majestic Cardinals replicas are nearly indistinguishable from the originals, and feature a special commemorative sleeve patch as well as the 1982 Ken Boyer memorial armband.

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1982 (Road)

Jason Scott Collection

May 5, 2013: St. Louis visited Milwaukee for a Turn Back the Clock game, to 1913. The Cardinals replica uniforms were stark in their plainness, featuring a completely blank front, with only the intertwined "ST.L" letters on the left sleeve for decoration. Red Varsity numbers on the back, though players did not wear numbers in 1913. The striped red and gray socks were an important part of the Cardinal uniform.

In a near repeat of the MLB-dictated costumes worn for 2013's game, the Cardinals played the Yankees for Memorial Day on May 26 at home and wore home white uniforms with camouflaged twill wordmarks outlined and embellished with a navy blue embroidery stitch (for this jersey, the front logo is rendered in twill rather than in the usual chain stitch embroidery). The birds have yellow embroidered beaks. Player names and numbers are desert camouflage outlined by navy blue.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1978

July 27, 2014: Visiting Chicago for a second date in the Cubs' year-long 100th birthday celebration for Wrigley Field, we had a "road-on road" game. The Cardinals wore 1970s-styled road gray jerseys while the Cubs dressed in their 1978 powder blue pinstriped road uniforms. The Cardinals' uniforms were made by Majestic surely using the same perfect patterns as had been used for the Cards' own 2012 throwback games of just two seasons before (a conscious decision was made for the Cards to wear gray instead of the correct-for-1978 powder blues; had the Cards worm their 1978 powder blues, both teams on the field would have been wearing the same colors, a confusing prospect).

2015 Memorial Day

The Cards are home again for Memorial Day on May 25, 2015. However, they alter their jerseys slightly from the year before, this time outlining the layer of desert camouflage twill in red embroidery stitch instead of navy blue. Names on back and front and back numbers are also outlined in red twill. This detail, contrary to most teams that just replace their top layer of twill and leave their remaining outlines intact, actually makes the camo lettering slightly less legible from a distance than the blue outlines, which provided more contrast. For this jersey, the front logo is rendered in twill rather than in the usual chain stitch embroidery. The jersey also has the Oscar Taveras memorial patch on the left sleeve. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/white rather than its typical colors from 2014.

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1961

Jason Scott Collection

In June 19 and 21 road games against the Phillies, who wear 1969 home jerseys, the Cardinals throw back to their 1961 road set. The Cards, of course, have been fairly consistent in their style over the years, so these jerseys are easily mistaken for their regular road jerseys by the casual observer. However, the absence of both the name on back and front number certainly distinguishes these, as does the vaunted Cardinals logo itself. Though the logo is chain stitched like the current models, it is smaller overall, with narrower lettering, and less detailed, smaller birds. Some of the fine points of the birds differ from an authentic 1961 jersey, but overall, a good recreation. The jersey does display two anachronisms, the Father's Day ribbon hovering over the shoulder of the right bird (June 21 was Father's Day in 2015), and the Oscar Taveras memorial patch on the left sleeve.

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palate might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Cardinals wear their home white jerseys with the red-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in blue, including their front logo as well as front and back numbers. For this jersey, the front logo is rendered in twill rather than in the usual chain stitch embroidery. Player names on back are in blue. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve and the Oscar Taveras memorial patch is on the left.

Thirty years after, the Cards and Royals relive their matchup in the “I-70” 1985 World Series on July 23, and both teams wear throwbacks to honor the occasion. The Cards’ white, knit pullovers, made by Majestic, are very faithful reproductions of the originals, even down to the size and arc of the names on back. A period-appropriate Cardinals logo is chain stitched on front, with red/blue twill front and back numbers and name on back, sans nameplate. Contrary to the originals, this jersey also features a 1985 NL Champs anniversary patch on the right sleeve, and the Oscar Taveras memorial on the left.

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Cardinals wear their home white jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink with dark gray outlines. The baseball-bat perch on which the birds sit displays in lighter pink, also with a gray outline instead of the usual yellow. As a result of these modifications, the front logo is rendered in twill, and displays none of the chain stitch embroidery of the team's typical uniforms. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The style returned for 2017.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Cardinals apply the camouflage trimmings to their road gray jerseys for the game on May 30. The front lettering and front and back numbers are rendered in woodland camo with a black outline, and player names appear in single-color black. The two iconic cardinals on front shed their namesake color for the camo treatment as well (perhaps more effective for protection in nature than their natural coloring would be), and their baseball bat perch changes from yellow to tan. As a result of these modifications, the front logo is rendered in twill, and displays none of the chain stitch embroidery of the team's typical uniforms.

For a June 25 matchup against the Mariners in Seattle, the Cards and Mariners both wear 1984 throwbacks. The Cards' 1984 entry is a blue, knit road jersey by Majestic. Basically a powder blue road version of the 1985 throwback they wore the year before, this jersey is equally as accurate in most details, including the red/blue front and back numbers and name on back, without nameplate. The arc and spacing of the player names was closer on the home version from the year before, perhaps because the Mariners likely purchased this set, and may not have paid the same attention to detail to the road team's uniforms.

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Cardinals are at home and wear their home jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Cardinals select the red twill version with blue outlines for their front lettering and for their front and back numbers, with a blue player name on back. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. From a distance, the front of the July 4 jersey looks very similar to the typical Cardinals home jersey, since the star pattern on the red twill disappears a few feet away. The birds' baseball bat perch changes from yellow to gray. As a result of these modifications, the front logo is rendered in twill, and displays none of the chain stitch embroidery of the team's typical uniforms.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1956

Jason Scott Collection

Rare is the Cardinals uniform that doesn't feature the classic "birds on bat" logo, which has occupied the front of their jerseys every year since 1922—except 1956. At home against the 1956-clad Dodgers on July 23, the Cardinals relive this outlier in their uniform history. The cream-colored full-knit Majestic jerseys sport the script "Cardinals" wordmark in red/blue twill on front and a matching player number on back. A lone Cardinal, "at bat" rather than "on bat," appears as a patch on the left sleeve (the original was chain stitched). Though it only existed one year in its original form, this look screams "classic baseball" and is truly beautiful in its simplicity.

Derek Damian Collection

Recent World Series champions have celebrated their victories with gold-trimmed jerseys for the following home opener. Bolder teams might wear a sleeve patch for a season. After the Cardinals won their first series title in 1926, they let everyone know about it in 1927, with a beautifully boastful uniform for the whole season. To honor the 90th anniversary of the win, the Cards brought back the look in a pinstriped, full-knit throwback by Majestic against the A's on August 27. The Cardinals are proud of their uniform and logo history, and it shows in these jerseys that are as spot-on as modern reproductions can be. Single bird-on-bat, surrounded by "World Champions" all chain stitched on front left chest, with Old English "StL" in red/white twill on the left sleeve. Anachronistic player numbers in red Block adorn the back.

2017 Turn Back the Clock to 1967

To recognize the 50th anniversary of their 1967 World Series victory over the Red Sox, the Cardinals donned full-knit cream throwbacks of their 1967 home set, against the visiting Boston club on May 16. Made by Majestic, these beauties featured one anachronistic element – a 50th anniversary patch on the left sleeve. These Majestic jerseys are very well done, not a surprise for a team very proud of its aesthetic traditions, down to the elaborate embroidered front logo and squat, Rawlings' 1967-style squarish NOB lettering, which mimic the original almost exactly. Many players also wore high-cuffed pants as their predecessors from a half-century before had done. A spectacular display.

2017-2018 Memorial Day (Road)

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Cardinals apply this style to their road gray jerseys as worn on May 27–28, 2017 and May 26–28, 2018.

2017 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017, the Cardinals wear jerseys with navy blue bodies and red sleeves with white nicknames and red numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide red/white/red trim. The front features their classic birds-on-bat design, rendered as a patch rather than directly chain stitched to the jersey.

This jersey was also worn on August 20, 2017 for the Little League Classic with this patch on the left sleeve.

2018 Players Weekend

Players Weekend returns for a second year; a promotion intended to highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans. Brightly-colored jerseys are worn on the field on August 24–26, 2018, and once again, the Cool Base pullover jerseys are based on youth league designs with a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people with handwritten messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature an adaptation of the MLB logo showing the evolution of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic and set tags appear on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. The Cardinals wear jerseys with red bodies and navy blue sleeves with white nicknames and navy blue numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide red/white/red trim. 2018 Turn Back the Clock to 1968

Just a year after throwing back to 1967 to honor the 50th anniversary of their World Series win, the Cardinals throw back 50 years again, this time, to recognize a World Series they lost. Of course, it was at the behest of that's series' winner, the Tigers, who flipped the script by wearing road throwbacks at home, making the Cardinals wear these home versions. Aside from the lack of an anniversary patch, these are the same gorgeous uniforms from the year prior, and the full knit replicas are exacting in nearly all regards, including the iconic front logo and stout NOB lettering.

2019 St. Patrick's Day

The Cards return to green for St. Patrick's Day in 2019, taking on a similar Flex Base approach as many other teams who take part in the same holiday observance. The green jersey features the iconic birds on a bat logo and "Cardinals" lettering rendered in white/green/gray, with white/gray front and back numbers and white name on back. White knit trim encircles both sleeves near the ends and the familiar white shamrock patch adorns the right sleeve.

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Cardinals wear a white version of their home jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in white/gray with gray nickname on back.

2019, 2022 Hispanic Heritage

In 2019, the Cardinals recognize St. Louis' Latino community with a uniform tribute for the first time on September 15. Identical in all respects to their Flex Base home white jerseys, save for the use of "Cardenales" in the front wordmark, these Majestic jerseys likely went unnoticed by many at the ballpark given this set's similarity to their usual home togs. They return, this time made by Nike but otherwise identical, on August 28, 2022.

2020, 2022 Negro Leagues Tributes (St. Louis Stars)

The Cardinals throw back to the Negro League's St. Louis Stars twice in three years with the same style of road jerseys, first against the Royals on September 22, 2020, and again on September 9, 2022 against the Pirates. Both sets are gray, full-weight knits by Nike featuring "St. Louis" arched on the front in navy/red, navy trim on the neck opening, placket, and sleeve ends, and navy/red Varsity numbers on back. The "SCKC" code on the Nike tag is curious. The "SC" prefix is on all Cardinals jerseys (for St. Louis Cardinals), but perhaps the "KC" is a reference to the first of these games having been played in Kansas City. Home clubs usually purchase special uniforms for both teams, and since the style remained unchanged for the second game, the same code may have been used again. Odd to see one team's jersey reference another team in this way.

2024 Negro Leagues Tribute/Rickwood Field (St. Louis Stars)

Rickwood Field, the oldest professional ballpark in the United States and former home of the Birmingham Black Barons of the Negro Leagues, was the site of a special regular season game between the Cardinals and Giants on June 20, 2024. To honor the occasion, both teams wore Negro Leagues throwback jerseys that they had donned before—here, the Cardinals return to the St. Louis Stars that they represented most recently in 2020 and 2022. The jersey design is identical to those previous games, however, this version is made in Cool Base fabric rather than full knit. Despite the league-wide change to Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) for regular jerseys, these throwbacks are still made on a knit template. Knit trim is sewn on rather than into the neck and sleeve ends. Numbers are not perforated. Surprisingly, this jersey still has the "SCKC" style code of the knit iteration of the jersey, and a 09B0 code on the wash tag, which would indicate a VPE jersey. The game occurred just two days after Willie Mays' passing, so both teams wore memorial patches to honor him on the left chest of the jerseys. Mays played for the Black Barons at Rickwood Field in 1948 before his debut with the Giants. This iteration also features the MLB logo on back collar and the sponsor sleeve patch—neither of which was included on the earlier versions.

1968 Double-Knit “Overalls” Concept

Found by Cardinals uniform and logo historian Oliver Kodner, who runs the incredible Cardinals Uniforms and Logos blog and website (cardinalsuniformsandlogos.com), are these concept drawings for Cardinals home and road uniforms around 1968. They appear to show sleeveless uniform “overalls”—a single-piece top and bottom with ankle-length stirrup pants, not unlike a male gymnasts’ uniform. This screenshot was taken from an industrial film about the miracles of new, man-made fabrics like polyester, and predate the team’s switch to knits in 1970 by two years. Vest jerseys were also having a moment in baseball at that time, which may explain their presence here. The rest of the film shows two “designers” reviewing these concepts at a factory, and later, the same two drawings are shown to Cardinals manager Red Schoendienst and GM Bing Devine, who review them with outfielder Floyd Wicker at the team’s Spring Training facility. At right, we share mock-up of the road version created by Kodner for his site. It is unknown if these prototypes were ever seriously considered by the team, though the presence of Cardinals leadership and players in the film does lend credence to these unusual, and mercifully rejected, futuristic designs.

1997 MDA-Day Jersey

The Cardinals did not wear front numbers on their jerseys in 1997. But nobody reminded the seamstress of that fact when the set of 1997 MDA (Muscular Dystrophy Association) Cardinals Care Jerseys are made up for use on Labor Day of 1997. These jerseys were auctioned off to raise money for the charity. I have seen multiple examples with the 1997 Jackie Robinson Patch, 1997 year tags, and numbers on the front, so obviously the entire set was sewn this way. This shows again that the rules “always” and “never” should be avoided when human error is possible.

1999 MDA-Day Red Jersey

1999: The Cardinals wear solid fabric red jerseys (not mesh fabric, like their BP jerseys) on August 28 (the team was on the road on Labor Day in 1999). Jerseys were auctioned off to raise money for Muscular Dystrophy Association research. The front wordmark is completely chain stitched onto a white cloth backing, and then this cloth is sewn to the jersey front. This is like the 1998-2002 batting practice jersey, and not like the team's white and gray game jerseys. These were auctioned off as a "Jerseys Off Their Backs" promotion.

Prototype St. Louis Stars Negro Leagues Throwback?

The Cardinals have honored the Negro League's' St. Louis Stars several times over the years, using a few different uniform designs, some of which were not very representative of what the Stars wore. This example, made by AIS, dates between 1999–2015 based on the manufacturer tagging. AIS did make several Stars throwbacks for the Cardinals, but this specific style was never worn by the Cardinals, and is, at best, an interpretation of the Stars' uniforms of the late 1920s and early 1930s. It is possible that it was made up as a sample for one of the throwback games that went unused. Note the presence of the AIS logo on the sleeve, which would not have been allowed on-field by MLB. The sleeve logo, and the unusual XXL size for a prototype, could point to this having been a Minor League issue, though we have not been able to confirm this.

2003 Prototype Turn Back the Clock to 1944

Before taking on the Orioles for a 2003 throwback to the 1944 World Series (when the Orioles were the Browns), the Cardinals were presented with this sample jersey for approval. Though the “5” on back may suggest Cards superstar Albert Pujols, it is actually a common back number for sample jerseys, as is the size 46 of the jersey. Finally, the tell-tale sample tag sewn inside the placket, reading CARH44J (for Cardinals home 1944 jersey) seals the origins of this item. Ultimately, the team must have liked what they saw—and the Cardinals are very particular about their uniform history, so that is high praise—as this is the same style that took the field for game.

Not In Alignment

When Majestic delivered the Cardinals' the first set of game uniforms for 2011, it was immediately apparent that the front embroidery was misaligned when the shirts were buttoned.

The Cardinals returned this set of uniforms to Majestic. What happened to them afterwards is, so far, unclear.

2011 Prototype Batting Practice

Jason Scott Collection

Each time MLB changes the league-wide batting practice jersey templates, Majestic provides prototypes to teams to see the various available options "in the cloth." Here is one such example, a Cardinals batting practice jersey made in advance of the 2011 season, with blue shoulder and side panels. Like most of these recent samples, the back names and numbers are "Player" and a number representing the year, here 11. A strip tag inside the button placket reads "CAR-BP-D1-1-2011" with "D1" representing that this was design number one. It is likely there were at least one or two others, with the all-red version the team chose (see above, right) being one of those options.

2015 Blues NHL Hockey-Style Batting Practice

Derek Damian Collection

As cross-town and cross-sport promotions become more popular, long-time neighbors the St. Louis Cardinals and Blues get into the act in 2015. For batting practice before the September 21 game, the Cards wear Majestic knit jerseys that are based on the Blues' white road sweaters. The details are fairly accurate, down to the rounded back tails of current NHL jerseys, allowing for the difference in construction of baseball jerseys, such as short sleeves. Names on back are in royal blue with numbers in royal/yellow/navy Varsity, just like the Blues wear on the ice (though the NHL nameplates are not present here). The left sleeve features the Cardinals' single bird on bat logo, while the right has the team's STL cap logo. The jerseys were later auctioned off for the Cardinals Care Charity.

2016 Blues NHL Hockey-Style Batting Practice

For the second year, the Cards promote their cross-town neighbors the St. Louis Blues. In batting practice before the September 29 game, the Cards wear Majestic knit jerseys that are based on the Blues' blue home sweaters. The details are fairly accurate, down to the rounded back tails of current NHL jerseys, allowing for the difference in construction of baseball jerseys, such as short sleeves. Names on back are in white with numbers in yellow/royal blue/white Varsity, just like the Blues wear on the ice (though the NHL nameplates are not present here). The left sleeve features the Cardinals' single bird on bat logo, while the right has the team's STL cap logo. The jerseys were auctioned off for the Cardinals Care Charity.

2017 Blues NHL Hockey-Style Batting Practice

Continuing an annual tradition of honoring the crosstown St. Louis Blues hockey team, the Cardinals take to the field for batting practice on September 20 sporting these hockey-style jerseys. A new design this year (as is the custom) features a Majestic full-knit powder blue base with white/blue/yellow/blue/white sleeve and body striping mimicking a hockey jersey. The Cards' typical home jersey logo appears on front of this pullover, with yellow neck trim, yellow/blue/white Varsity numbers and yellow name on back. Oddly, no St. Louis Blues logo appears on the jersey, as it has in the past (and will, again, in the future).

Steve Kraljic collection

Ice hockey returns to the baseball field in St. Louis on September 21 when the Cardinals repeat the gesture of saluting the St. Louis Blues in batting practice. This year's entry makes direct reference to hockey and the Blues, which was not the case the year before. The Blues won the Stanley Cup later that season, so perhaps this helped! This year's entry is a full-knit white Majestic pullover with two sets of blue/red/blue stripes, separated by a wide white stripe, on sleeves and body. Blue/red/blue trim also surrounds the V-neck, while the chest is adorned with a single bird on a bat, like the Cards' alternate cap logo, but with his baseball-bat perch replaced with a yellow hockey stick. The Blues logo returns as a patch on the left sleeve. Red/white/blue back numbers complete the look with a blue name on back.

2019 Blues NHL Hockey-Style Batting Practice

Whomever gets to design these Cardinals hockey jerseys must be allowed quite a bit of artistic freedom, as these special batting practice togs are different every single year. Worn on September 13, here's the fifth incarnation of the tribute to the St. Louis Blues, a navy pullover with red shoulders, and white/blue/red stripes on sleeves and body. The Majestic full-weight knits cop the Cardinal's alternate "St. Louis" bird on a bat logo for front decoration, with red/blue/white numbers on back below a white player name. Once again, the Blues' own music-note logo adorns the left sleeve. The Cardinals were quite committed to this promotion, even if it was only worn before the games began. One wonders if the MLB mandate that players tuck in their jerseys prevented this one from being worn on the field during a game.

Grey St. Louis Cardinals 1920-1921 style road Jersey

MLB's annual Field of Dreams game, in which two teams play a regular season game in Dyersville, Iowa, adjacent to the shooting location of the famous film, was supposed to debut in 2020 with a showdown between the White Sox and Yankees. After being postponed because of COVID, the Cardinals were named to replace the Yankees since games in the shortened season were scheduled only between teams in the same divisions across both leagues. After an outbreak of COVID-19 among Cardinals coaches, the game was canceled and made its first appearance in 2021 instead, with the original White Sox and Yankees match up. This Cardinals throwback was most likely made for the canceled 2020 affair. Described by MLB authentications as "1920-1921 style" these Cool Base material jerseys feature "St. Louis" arched across the front in red in a font similar to what the Red Sox wear today. A handful of these jerseys were sold by the Cardinals Authentics shop, but none feature any back numbering or lettering so we do not know for sure how that would have looked. Based on Marc Okkonen's research, these are reasonably tolerable copies of the originals, though 100 years prior, the jerseys featured a sun collar and red knit trim around the end of the three-quarter sleeves, a style that would not be tolerated by today's players.

Left: The Cardinals' original 1920-1921 uniforms, courtesy of Marc Okkonen's research. These jerseys were likely chosen to throwback 100 years from the 2020 Field of Dreams game, and to be roughly analogous to the White Sox 1919 jersey from the game, and the film. These plain jerseys gave way to a radical 1922 design that, for the very first time, featured the legendary "birds on bat" logo, some version of which has appeared on almost every Cardinals jersey to this very day.

2022 Unused St. Patrick's Day

Steve Kraljic collection

Offered here are 2022 green Cardinals St. Patrick's Day jerseys, which were made for the team but we believe were not worn. Spring Training was delayed that season during labor negotiations. Though games started on March 17 for some teams, the Cards' first spring game of 2022 was on March 18. As a result, even though Nike made up a full set of these, we believe that they were scrapped when the Cards started a day too late for them to be worn.

Footnote: Jason Scott's Collection of Cardinals Turn Back the Clock Jerseys

Cardinals collector Jason Scott has an incredible collection of Cards memorabilia, including this complete run of Cardinals TBTC jerseys. (These photos were taken at the end of the 2015 season, so it represents all of the Cards' throwbacks through that year.) Many of these jerseys are quite hard to find, so assembling the full collection is quite a feat!

Many of the photos in this chapter feature items from Jason's collection, and he has been extremely generous sharing his time and expertise, helping update and edit this chapter.

Yadier Molina Prefers Full-Weight Knits...

This fact was called to our attention by reader Michael Roman. It seems that catcher Yadier Molina seems to prefer wearing full-weight knit jerseys (top) instead of the standard issue Flex Base ones (bottom left), and the team caters to his wishes. Notice the old-style construction with the heavier fabric and without the side vents and breathable tail. His full-weight jersey receives old-style tagging on the tail as well. The tradition continued even with jerseys made by Nike in 2021 (above) and 2022.This special modification does not seem to have extended to one-off holiday jerseys like the 2016 Mothers Day and Memorial Day jerseys (below) which are Flex Base.

Commemorative Patches

Cardinals Patches

The Fine Print: In earlier editions of this book I had incorrectly listed the AAB JR patch as being from 1989. I was certain of this, since several photos in my collection clearly show the patch on jerseys with 1989 year tags. I was corrected by Cardinals' collector Bob Bower, who noted that the patch was worn in 1990. The "evidence" I had collected pointed instead to another fact: that the Cardinals were still heavily recycling game jerseys into the next season as late as the early 1990s!

2024: The Whitey Herzog Memorial Patch Saga

Hall of Famer and legendary former Cardinals manager Whitey Herzog died on April 15, 2024. As the beloved architect of the team's 1982 World Series championship season, Herzog seemed like a likely figure to be honored with a memorial patch The Cardinals essentially standardized their memorials for team legends starting in 2013, using a circle patch with a wide, red border, and the honoree's uniform number overlaid with his autograph on a background that matched each of the team's different jersey colors. As expected, the Cardinals added such a memorial for Herzog starting on May 17.

What was not expected this time around was the use of a heat-pressed, printed decal of sorts on each uniform sleeve. For a team that works hard to adhere to tradition and old-time flourishes, like chainstitch embroidery, the printed patch seemed very modern, and perhaps even cheap as a result. Over the course of the next five weeks, these heat-pressed "patches" remained, and were likely not noticed by many to be any different from memorials of the past. However, eagle-eyed Cardinals uniform and logo historian Oliver Kodner, who runs the invaluable Cardinals Uniforms and Logos blog and website (cardinalsuniformsandlogos.com), caught on, and also noticed that the decal used on the road gray jerseys was either the white version, or the gray background was so light that it appeared white in comparison.

The heat-pressed version on the gray road uniform, which looks like it has a white background, or a gray background so light it appears white against the jersey.

However, when the Cardinals took to the field on June 22, the heat-pressed memorial had been replaced by a new, embroidered version of the patch. Similar to other patches used on 2024 Nike Vapor Premier Elite uniforms, it was not as thick or richly embroidered as patches of the past, but it was still an upgrade from the thin, rubbery decal of weeks prior.

Now that the Cardinals have added a red City Connect jersey, they have included this colorway as a fifth version of memorial patches, keyed to the colors used on the new jersey set. Artwork for all five versions, as originally presented on Kodner's site, are presented here.

Temporary, heat-pressed sponsor "patches" for one-off special events, like MLB World Tour games in different countries, are one thing. But one hopes this will be the first and last time any team chooses to honor one of its legends in this manner.

We have yet to see a 2024 Cardinals jersey "in the cloth" with the heat-pressed patch. Perhaps they were taken out of circulation, or the decal was covered with the embroidered patch? Any info would be greatly appreciated. .

2023-2025 Cardinals Advertising Patches

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Cardinals struck a sponsor patch deal with Stifel, a financial services company. The patches first appeared on May 2, 2023.

There are five versions of the ad patch, each designed to match the base color of the team's home, home alternate, road, powder blue, and City Connect jerseys. The patch features the word "STIFEL" in red, outlined in navy, except on the City Connect version, where it is white outlined in navy.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player.

Letter of Restoration/Professional Opinion

Dwain Anderson 1972 St. Louis Cardinals Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: January 6, 2025 Certification Number: 25-0106J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Home pullover with rounded crew-neck, white body with flat tails (both typical for 1972) Rawlings size 42 (tagged and measured) St. Louis Cardinals jersey of Cardinal backup infielder Dwain Anderson. Red/white/Navy sewn in crew neck trim and 1 1/2" sewn-in sleeve-end knit trim. The size of this jersey is reasonable for the player. The Cardinals team wordmark logo with two cardinals sitting on a bat with "Cardinals" scripted directly underneath in a cursive custom team font is all-directly chain stitched in red, navy and gold. Number "19" in red outlined in Navy two layer tackle twill, is direct-sewn on the front and centered on the back. As received, the ghost of the removed name ANDERSON is clearly visible on the light table. All fonts/outline widths are correct, matching the period Rawlings Cardinals template.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings size 42 red-label manufacturer tag correct for 1972 (first year of use of this style tag) is sewn on the front inside tail of the jersey. This tagging matches exemplars for team-issued 1972 Cardinals jerseys. There is no flag tag designating the year or set, and it does not appear that one was ever present. While there is no year tagging, Anderson played on the Cardinals in only 1972-1973, and in 1973 team jerseys changed to a V-Neck, isolating the year of issue to 1972 for this one.

Wear & Repairs A light table examination reveals that player numbers are original without change or contrivance. Showing extensive use, with ground in dirt stains above the waist noted on front, besides missing the player name on back, the top (red) layer of the back numbers was in tatters. As was the practice then, the Cardinals typically sent their used MLB uniforms to the minors for re-use, and player names were stripped for their use there. There are no signs of any repairs, and it is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed excessively, causing moderate fading to the embroidery of the Cardinals crest on front. There is notable puckering of the fabric around and behind the team front crest from hot water washing. Numbers and letters on the jersey show signs of puckering, burnishing and faded and loose threads around the edges from repeated wash and wear.

Restoration performed: In an effort to preserve originality as much as possible, its owner decided to replace only the top (red) layer of the back numbers. The player name was lifted from using the ghosts seen on the light table and matched to the 1972 Cardinals player name font. The name was re-cut along with the top layer of the back numbers, and they were were aggressively media blasted to make them better match the color and patina of the front lettering. All lettering was stitched in place with suitably faded thread to match the appearance of extreme wash-wear.

Top, as received. Below, the light table images of the name on back ghosts that were used in the accurate restoration.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits very heavy use and wash wear, and noting the accurate restoration of the back name and numbers as described, appears to have no other alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine team issue and was worn by Dwain Anderson of the St. Louis Cardinals during the 1972 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Ted Simmons 1977 St. Louis Cardinals Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: July 6, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0706J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road-style, Columbia Blue Rawlings size 42 (tagged and measured) V-neck pullover St. Louis Cardinals jersey of Cardinal' catcher Ted Simmons. Red/white/Navy sewn in v-neck and 1 1/2" sewn-in sleeve-end knit trim. Simmons alternated between size 42 and 44 jerseys at this stage of his career. The Cardinals team wordmark logo with two cardinals sitting on a bat with "Cardinals" scripted directly underneath in a cursive custom team font is all-directly chain stitched in red, navy and gold. Number "23" in red outlined in Navy two layer tackle twill, is direct-sewn on the front, and also below the radially arched name "SIMMONS" on the back. Jersey is signed by Simmons on the front below the numbers (I have no professional opinion on the signature). All fonts/outline widths are correct, matching the period Rawlings Cardinals template.

Simmons is considered one of the best hitting catchers in MLB history. In 1977, Simmons appeared in 150 games for the Cardinals, hitting .318 in 516 at bats with 21 home runs. In his 21 year career, he played the first 13 years for the Cardinals. At the time of his retirement, Simmons led all catchers in career hits and doubles and ranked second in RBIs behind Yogi Berra and second in total bases behind Carlton Fisk. He also retired with the National League record for home runs by a switch-hitter despite playing several years in the American League. Simmons hit .300 seven different times, hit 20 home runs six times, and caught 122 shutouts, eighth-most all-time. He was elected into the Baseball Hall of Fame in December 2019. On July 31, 2021, he was honored by the Cardinals with the retirement of his jersey number along with the dedicattion of a statue. (Wikipedia, Baseball Almanac)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings size 42 red-label manufacturer tag correct for 1977 is sewn on the front inside tail of the jersey. A flag tag "Set 1 1977" is pinch sewn under the right border. This tagging matches exemplars for team-issued 1977 Cardinals jerseys.

Wear & Repairs A light table examination reveals that all lettering is original without change or contrivance. There are no signs of any repairs, and it is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times, though all stitching remains bright and tight. There is notable puckering of the fabric around the team front crest from hot water washing. Numbers and letters on the jersey show signs of puckering, burnishing and loose threads around the edges from repeated wash and wear. The tops of the shoulders and the lower sides show some extra wear: ground in dirt and fabric pulls typically related to the wearing of catcher's equipment.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits strong use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine team issue and was issued to and worn by Hall of Fame catcher Ted Simmons of the St. Louis Cardinals during the 1977 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Pete Vuckovich 1978 St. Louis Cardinals Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date:April 27, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0427J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: St. Louis Cardinals size 46 with 2" extra length tailoring marked and measured), road Columbia Blue Rawlings jersey of pitcher Pete Vukovich. Heavyweight knit pullover with 2" red/white/blue banded knit trim on both sleeve ends and 1" ribbed knit trim around the v-neck. The Cardinals "Birds on a Bat" wordmark is fully chain-stitched on the front in red, navy and bright yellow. The number "46" is sewn on the left chest and on back, and the player's name is steeply arched, all in red outlined with navy. All the lettering fonts, sizes and outline thicknesses are correct for the 1978 Cardinals, following the team template exactly. Vuckovich preferred jerseys with extra-length tailoring this, from his first-year on the Cardinals, is marked for 2" extra length, but it is actually 3" longer with a 37" back tail.

Pete Vukovich, 6' 4" 220 lbs, enjoyed an 11 year MLB career with the White Sox, Blue Jays, Cardinals and Brewers. In 1978 he went 15-12 for the Cardinals, appearing in 45 games and finishing with a very respectable 2.54 ERA. (Baseball Almanac) Despite a notable career as a professional baseball player, he is known in popular culture mainly for his role as fictional Yankees slugger Clu Haywood, the chief nemesis of Charlie Sheen's character Ricky Vaughn, in the popular 1989 film Major League. (Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The red Rawlings locker tag (1972-1984 style) is sewn inside the front left tail. A small white flag tag is sewn underneath and to the right; "SET 1 1978". A second flag tab below reads "2 INCHES EXTRA LENGTH" This jersey's year of issue pre-dates manufacturer logos being sewn on sleeves, and authentic-spec team jerseys being available for retail sale. Cardinals jerseys from this period were not player-tagged.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all lettering is original to the jersey, which is free of repairs of contrivances. The jersey is in very good condition and shows wash wear and use consistent with what one would expect from a season's use by a pitcher. There are signs of minor puckering of the embroidery and lettering and fading of the outline thread of the lettering caused by washing. The tails are somewhat dirty from use and storage as are the tops of the sleeves. Several narrow brown vertical stripes and spots on the front could be from tobacco juice.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits game use and wash wear, and appears to have no other alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Cardinals' pitcher Pete Vuckovich during the 1978 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion/ Letter of Restoration

Pete Vuckovich 1979 St. Louis Cardinals Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: June 15, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0615J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: St. Louis Cardinals size 46 with 3" extra length (marked and measured), home white Rawlings jersey of pitcher Pete Vukovich. heavyweight knit pullover with 2" red/white/blue banded knit trim on both sleeve ends and 1" ribbed knit trim around the v-neck. The Cardinals "Birds on a Bat" wordmark is fully chain-stitched on the front in red, navy and bright yellow. In 1979-1980 the Cardinals temporarily abandoned their traditional front numbers and instead added small numbers on both sleeves. Player name sewn on the back in a steep arch above the numbers, with player numbers on both sleeves, all in red over Navy Blue.

Pete Vukovich, (6' 4" 220 lbs.), enjoyed an 11 year MLB career with the White Sox, Blue Jays, Cardinals and Brewers. In 1978 he appeared in 34 games, all as a starter, for the Cardinals and went 15-10, and finishing with a 3.40 ERA. (Baseball Almanac) Despite a notable career as a professional baseball player, he is known in popular culture mainly for his role as fictional Yankees slugger Clu Haywood, the chief nemesis of Charlie Sheen's character Ricky Vaughn, in the popular 1989 film Major League. (Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The red Rawlings locker tag (1972-1984 style) is sewn inside the front left tail, displaying the size as 46. A small white flag tag is sewn to the right; "SET 1 1979" with a second tag above reading "3 inch extra length". This jersey's year of issue pre-dates manufacturer logos being sewn on sleeves, and also pre-dates team-spec jerseys being available for retail sale. Cardinals jerseys from this period were not player-tagged.

Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey had been treated to a well meaning but amateurish restoration. The original numbers had been stripped from the back and sleeves, as had the player name on back. Replacement lettering was sewn in its place, but using incorrect fonts and not directly over the ghost outlines of the original lettering. For good measure, front numbers were added; these had never been there in the first place.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

At left, as received, with incorrect lettering plus the incorrect addition of front number that were never present as originally issued. Below, after being stripped the superimposed team fonts match the ghosts remaining on the fabric from the original lettering.

The removal of the incorrect lettering and placement on the light table clearly revealed the proper size, shape and placement of all of the original lettering. The removal of the incorrect lettering left some staining from the glue/heat used in their application, and the white jersey body itself was stained a pale yellowish hue. I removed the marks the best I could and followed by lightly bleaching the jersey fabric to even the color and lighten the yellowing, then laundered and steamed the fabric to remove most of the marks from the incorrectly-applied lettering.

Superimposing the official team fonts from 1979, I found that, unsurprisingly, they covered the original ghosts perfectly. I cut and stitched them from two-layer tackle twill using the same materials and methods as would have been employed in 1979.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that besides the formerly-incorrect lettering, the garment itself is free of repairs of contrivances. The jersey is in good condition and shows wash wear and use consistent with what one would expect from a season's use by a pitcher. There is significant puckering of the Cardinals front crest embroidery caused by overly-hot-water washing. But all embroidery is still intact and bright without fading. Now, placing the garment on the light table, the impressions of the mis-applied lettering from the prior restoration are still somewhat visible.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tailored, tagged and lettered; player lettering has been professionally restored to the original appearance. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits game use and wash wear, and has no other alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Cardinals' pitcher Pete Vuckovich during the 1979 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Mark McGwire 1998 Autographed Home Game Jersey and 1999 Pants

Examination Date: November 27. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1127J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: St. Louis Cardinals 1998 Home white jersey, Mark McGwire #25. Rawlings-made, size 52, six-button front with special flat-bottomed tails and extra-length sleeves as used by McGwire. One-year only 1998 front "birds on a bat" design; birds have red beaks (not yellow), yellow eyes, and Navy feet (not yellow). 1998 jerseys also were used minus front numbers, a change after many decades. On back, the player's number, 25 and name, "McGwire" both in red over navy layered twill, using the unique and correct fonts/outline widths of the St. Louis Cardinals. The name is correctly arched and sewn to a surged edge knit plate. The jersey is autographed in blue Sharpie on the front left chest, and has a MLB serialized hologram on it that links it to a 2004 signing event. (I offer no opinions on the authenticity of autographs.)

It is accompanied by a pair of Rawlings Cardinals home pants, 1999 year tagged for McGwire. With a 36" waist and 39" length, the pants are a reasonable size for the 6' 5" player and show good wear.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings locker tag, correct for 1998 is sewn inside the front left tail. Pinched under the right side of the tag is a flag tab, "Set 1 1998". Pinched under the bottom of the tag in the center is a size 52 flag tab. No Rawlings sleeve logo, as contractually restricted in 1998. The tagging style matches exemplars and is correct for 1998. There are two Steiner hologram tags adhered to the team tagging, though neither is serialized, and no accompanying Steiner certificates were provided to me.

The pants have the sewn Rawlings locker tag and strip tagging inside the waist, machine embroidered as "McGWIRE 25 36-39 37 99 1"

Jerseys

Hologram number MT00441471

Wear & Repairs: This jersey had been professionally tailored at the time of manufacture to have a flat-tailed bottom, as McGwire preferred his jerseys to be made. It also has sleeves that are at least 2" longer than normal, though neither of these modifications is noted with any special tagging on the garment. It shows signs of moderate wear, especially in the puckering of the chain-stitched embroidered front team mark, and in the notable puckering of the twill lettering on back. The fabric is soft and moderately weathered, and slightly grayed indicative of use and repeat laundering. There are a few accidental black marker dots on outside of the jersey near the location of the team tagging. A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alterations.

Comments: 1998 was a historic year for McGwire and MLB, as it was the year that McGwire broke Roger Maris' single-season home run record that had stood for four and a half decades, ending the season with 70 home runs. The home run race between McGwire, Sammy Sosa and Ken Griffey Jr. was watched avidly all season by sports fans, and many credit this spectacle with helping revive the popularity of MLB that had been damaged by the players' strike of 1994-1995. The collector market was flooded with McGwire "game worn" jerseys in the years that followed, some real, many not. Photo matching 1998 McGwire jerseys is not easy, and the effort was not attempted with this authentication. But consider the following facts that bear consideration: The jersey is the proper size and has McGwire's customer tailoring. It shows clear signs of use and wash/wear, and it has been autographed after that wear occurred. It has a serialized MLB hologram certifying when it was signed.

Conclusion: This jersey is the proper size for the player with all custom tailoring. It has correct team tagging and shows signs of use and wear. It has an MLB certification of its signature. While without further photo research and provenance, it is not realistic to positively certify this as "McGwire game used", It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for Mark McGwire of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Jim Edmonds St. Louis Cardinals 2004 Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: March 16, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0316J01R

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Majestic size 48 six-button, full-weight knit St. Louis Cardinals home jersey of outfielder Jim Edmonds. Direct embroidered birds-on-a-bat team wordmark on front in red, gold and Navy Blue, in the proper style for these years. Edmonds' #15 is below in the correct font and size in red outlined with Navy Blue. On back in the same colors is the player number with his name above, sewn on a surged-edge nameplate. Birds on bat detail is correct for 2004. All fonts are correct for the 2004 Cardinals. The MLB Silhouetted Batter patch in red, white and blue is properly stitched to the center of the back of the neck. The jersey is autographed in black Sharpie on the lower right front tail with the inscription "Jimmy Ballgame" below. I have no opinion on the autograph. There is a JSA certification sticker on the inside of the jersey on the reverse of the locker tag validating the autograph, but no matching certificate was provided.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Edmonds played for the Cardinals 2000-2007. While there is no team or year tagging on this jersey, we can narrow down its year of issue by the lack of sleeve patches and the fact that it is made by Majestic. 2003 and 2004 are the only two years that meet these criteria. Notably, the Cardinals year tagged only occasionally in 2004. The Majestic "M" logo is direct embroidered on the end of the left sleeve in red. Authentic Collection locker tag in the proper style for these years is stitched to the outside lower left tail. Centered on the bottom of the tag, a flag-tab is pinch-sewn beneath showing the size as 48, correct for Edmonds' use. On the inside side seam is Majestic's style tag, which designates this jersey as 0062: the correct code for team-spec issue.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitching on this jersey is original and without alteration or contrivance. The jersey is in very good condition but has clearly been worn and washed multiple times. The fabric is softened and there are many tiny pulls and piling on the fabric indicative of use. The inside-seam tagging is similarly faded and wrinkled.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good used condition, is properly lettered, and has no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Jim Edmonds of the St. Louis Cardinals in 2004.

Albert Pujols St. Louis Cardinals 2002 Autographed Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: September 29, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0929J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Rawlings size 48 six-button, full-weight knit St. Louis Cardinals home jersey of 3B/LF/RF Albert Pujols in his second year of MLB service. Direct embroidered birds-on-a-bat team wordmark on front in red, gold and Navy Blue, in the proper style for this year. Pujols' #5 is below in the correct font and size in red outlined with Navy Blue. On back in the same colors is the player number with his name above, sewn on a serged-edge nameplate stitched to the jersey. All Cardinals specific fonts/sizes/outline widths are correct. The MLB Silhouetted Batter patch in red, white and blue is properly stitched to the center of the back of the neck. The jersey is autographed in black Sharpie on the back between the nameplate and the player numbers, "A. Pujols 05". (I have no professional opinion on the autograph.) There are two sleeve patches on this jersey. On the left is the JFB memorial patch for broadcaster Joe Buck. On the right is the DK57 memorial disk for pitched Darryl Kyle. Both of these patches were added to Cardinals jerseys in late June of 2002.

Pujols played for the Cardinals 2001-2011. In his rookie season of 2000, He was unanimously named the NL Rookie of the Year after setting an NL rookie record with 130 RBI (fifth in the league) and becoming the fourth MLB rookie to hit .300 with 30 home runs, 100 runs and 100 RBI. (Wikipedia) In 2002, he batted .314 with 34 home runs including two grand slams.

Provenance: The jersey is accompanied by a signed letter dated 6/8/21, from private collector Ric Anello , claiming that the jersey had been purchased by him from Todd Perry, CEO of the Pujols Foundation. The letter is signed by Anello alone.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings "Oval R" logo is direct embroidered on the end of the left sleeve in red. The Rawlings Authentic Collection locker tag in the proper style for 2002 is stitched correctly to the inside of the lower left tail. Centered on the bottom of the tag, a flag-tab is pinch-sewn beneath showing the size as 48, correct for Edmonds' use. Pinch-sewn on the right side of the tag is a well-worn, frayed flag tab, "SET 1 2002".

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitching on this jersey is original and without alteration or contrivance. It shows moderate wear with a few small fabric pulls and clearly was regularly used. All stitching remains tight and the embroidery and fabrics are clean and bright.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good, game-worn condition, is the proper size and is properly lettered, and has no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was worn by Albert Pujols of the St. Louis Cardinals in 2002.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Scott Rolen 2005 St. Louis Cardinals Green "St. Patty's Day" Game Worn Jersey, Auto'ed.

Examination Date: May 18, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0518J04

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Green heavyweight mesh six green button Majestic size 50 (marked and measured) "St. Patrick's Day" jersey of #27, third baseman Scott Rolen. Jersey is autographed on the top of the back number 7. (I have no professional opinion on the autograph.) Chain-stitched "Birds on a Bat" front wordmark is embroidered onto a white knit fabric patch in red, gold and Navy Blue, then the chest patch is sewn to both front panels of the green jersey. No trim, and with red/white/Navy MLB logo Silhouetted Batter patch stitched properly to the back of the neck. On back, Rolen's name and number 27 are stitched in the properly sized and outlined unique Cardinals font, white over Navy. The name is sewn to a properly serged-edge nameplate made of a double layer of the same green mesh fabric.

A comparison to exemplars shows Rolen was wearing size 50 jerseys at this point in his career. The MLB box score shows that this game on March 17, 2005 lasted only 2 1/2 innings before it was cancelled (assumedly by rain). There was not much play that day. I was unable to ascertain if Rolen was in the lineup that day.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Majestic locker tag is stitched to the outer left front tail in the proper style for 2005. A small flag tab noting the sizer as 50 is centered and pinched under the bottom hem of the tag. Next to it is a small white flag tab with 2005 printed on it. The Majestic triple peaks logo is direct embroidered in white to the end of the left sleeve. Inside the garment, a white flag tag is found that carries Majestic's style codes and patent information. This jersey properly has the team-issued style code "0006" that is reserved for team-spec heavyweight mesh fabric jerseys.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation does not reveal any alterations to this jersey, and it appears to be without contrivance. It shows very light use, perhaps being washed at most once, as would be appropriate for a single-game-use jersey.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent condition. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of any kind. It has team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Scott Rolen of the 2005 St. Louis Cardinals.

Mark McGwire 1999 Autographed Home Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: October 18, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1018J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: St. Louis Cardinals 1999 home white jersey, Mark McGwire #25. Rawlings-made, size 52, six-button front with special tailoring noted, 2" shorter length (the jersey is 34" long, normal for a size 50 is 35-36") It also has approximately 2" extra-length sleeves as used by McGwire, but that tailoring is not noted on the tagging. While earlier in his career when he wore a significantly smaller sized jersey and he then wore 2" extra length jerseys, starting around 1997 his jerseys began featured shorter tail tailoring, essentially making them the same length as his early, smaller jerseys were. New for 1999 front "birds on a bat" design; birds yellow beaks, white eyes and no yellow used in the legs. Front numbers returned in 1999 after a two-year absence, now in a new, smaller size than when they last were used. On back, the player's number, 25 and name, "McGwire" both in red over navy layered twill, using the unique and correct sized fonts/ outline widths of the St. Louis Cardinals. The name is correctly arched and sewn to a double-needle serged edge knit plate. The jersey is autographed in black Sharpie on the center of the back, between the name and numbers, adding the number "70" (home runs) (I offer no opinions on the authenticity of autographs.) There is no hologram or serial numbering on this jersey. That MLB program began in 2001. This jersey was presented without provenance.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings locker tag, correct for 1999 is sewn inside the front left tail. Pinched under the right side of the tag is a flag tab, "Set 1 1999". Pinched under the bottom of the tag is a size 52 flag tab, and a 2 inch shorter length tag. No Rawlings sleeve logo, as contractually restricted in 1999. The tagging style matches exemplars and is correct for that year.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows signs of generally light use. The tagging is still relatively crisp, and there is minimal puckering of embroidery and sewn elements and all stitching is tight. The fabric is still bright white, but it is stained in several places with reddish scuffs of an unidentified substance (resembles lipstick) There are some dirt spots and stains on the sleeves, tail and above the nameplate. A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alterations.

Comments: In 1998 McGwire had broken Roger Maris' single-season home run record that had stood for four and a half decades, ending the season with 70 home runs. In 1999 McGwire appeared in 155 games and hit 65 more home runs while batting .268. It was his fourth consecutive season with 50 or more home runs. Consider the following facts that bear consideration: The jersey is the proper size and has McGwire's customer tailoring. It shows clear signs of use and wash/wear, and it has been autographed after that wear occurred. McGwire game worn jerseys were in great demand, and it would not be unreasonable that this one was worn a handful of times before being retired, autographed and passed to the collector market.

Conclusion: This jersey is the proper size for the player with custom tailoring. A light table examination shows no signs of alteration or contrivance. It has correct team tagging and shows signs of reasonable and appropriate use and wear, for Mark McGwire of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Chapter 16

Chicago Cubs

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Cubs Uniform History Notes

- Relatively few teams remain as true to their design heritage as the Cubs. Starting with colors, the team has stayed with red, white, and blue since 1916. The circular Cubs logo, while it has had refinements over the years, is easily recognizable from its first use in 1909.
- The current home jersey (as of 2025) is still nearly the same pinstriped model as the home jersey from 1957. To the careful eye, there are actually many small detail changes that differentiate one year from another. Things like the use of front buttons (or not), use of trim, patches, the number of colors used, and the presence of names on the back distinguish one year's jerseys from another.
- Road jerseys on the other hand, change frequently. There are 11 distinct styles of road jerseys used since 1970. While most simply spell out the word "Chicago" on a gray fabric base, there are several oddities worth noting.
- 1972 was a one-year design with flashy red, white, and blue trim at the neck and on the sleeve ends, featuring bold, two-color "Chicago" arched on the front, and an oddly placed central front number on the player's stomach. Overall, these uniforms were attractive, but perhaps they were considered too flashy for a visiting team. Because for 1973, all lettering was once again one-color (blue) on a gray fabric background. The fancy tri-colored knit trim was replaced with plain solid blue. Front numbers remained, but moved to a more traditional location on the left chest.
- In 1976, the road jersey base color changes from gray to powder blue, a trendy pick for the time. This style lasts two seasons.
- In 1978, the fabric was changed to a rather gaudy white-pinstriped powder blue. The Cubs had now become full fledged victims of the disco era, but thankfully, only on the road. At home, tradition still reigned.
- 1982–1989 the Cubs used a solid royal blue pullover "softball style" jersey for road games that looked just like the home jersey with the Cubs' disc on the left chest.
- 1990 reintroduced button-front jerseys for both home and road, and 1990–1993 returned the road jersey to traditional gray with the word "CHICAGO" spelled out, but this time in a straight line with no arch. The 1990 road jersey is a one-year design with short, wide letters that grew taller for 1991–1993.
- For three years (1994–1996), the Cubs tried out both road and alternate jerseys that feature a cursive script of "CUBS" that to critics was almost indistinguishable from the word "Cuba" as used on the front of the uniforms of the Cuban National Baseball team. Given the United States' frosty relationship with Cuba, this was not a popular fashion statement, and for 1997, the Cuba/Cubs was replaced again with a more traditional design.
- By 1994, the home jersey had lost all sleeve end and neck opening trim, returning in appearance close to the look of the 1970 jersey.
- A blue alternate jersey with a patch on the chest featuring a walking cub is introduced for 1997, and the team wears it frequently both at home and on the road through 2008, before it becomes a strictly road alternate in 2009. Road jerseys continue with "CHICAGO" across the front, with a couple of variations of type font.
- Names on back disappear from home-use jerseys for two years (2005–2006) before making a return.
- In connection with Wrigley Field's 100th anniversary, 2014–2015 brings a nostalgia inspired "mashup" gray road alternate jersey that is worn often, but retired after two seasons.
- The Cubs 2014 centennial year celebration for Wrigley Field and subsequent numerous Turn Back the Clock games meant that they team wore an incredible 17 different game uniform variations that year combined at home and on the road, leading your author to seriously contemplate whether he had the stamina to compile it for the guide.
- In 2021, the Cubs debuted their City Connect uniform, featuring a navy blue jersey with "Wrigleyville" across the chest. The design drew inspiration from Chicago's municipal flag, incorporating light blue accents and six-pointed stars on the sleeves, along with a custom number font modeled after CTA signage. The uniform aimed to highlight the neighborhood feel of Wrigleyville and the connection between the team and the city's North Side community. It is retired after the 2024 season.
- In 2025, a powder blue button-down alternate jersey is introduced, another nostalgia-inspired outfit that seems to draw inspiration from the Cubs 1976–1981 road colors and Chicago blues era typography. The design includes a sleeve patch shaped like a guitar pick. The ultimate result is a look that rekindles memories of the 1970s Expos.
- For decades, Cubs game jerseys have featured a distinctive, Cubs-specific round number font not used by any other team.

+ Wrigley armband after April 14
* Period game photos seem to show mostly Block style lettering in all years. But, I have verified two sets of 1984 jerseys exist. The ones sewn for the Cubs' playoff appearance in 1984 have Vertically Arched names on back, the regular season versions all appear to have standard Block names.
 It appears that originals have Block standard two-color names. However, there are some in the hobby that have vertically arched names on back. Some of these may have been restored to the whim of the current owner, reflecting the look of the popular 1984 playoff jerseys.

 Russell jerseys tagged "2000" may have been leftover 1999 and re-tagged, since Majestic became the Cubs supplier in 2000.
* The home and road blue alternate jerseys are identical, EXCEPT that the set used for home jerseys have no names on the back! When used on the road, the set with player names on back (NOB) is used.
 The Cubs did not wear their alternate blue jerseys at all in the 2007 season, and we have now seen at least one 2007 year tagged blue alternate jersey, so apparently the team made some. Any jersey tagged "2007" might be team issued but cannot be game worn.

1971

- Like those of the Dodgers, Yankees, and Tigers, the Cubs' home uniform is a sacred design that seems untouchable to the whims of changing styles.
- Though it has undergone some refinements through the years, the round, recognizable Cubs disc has been on the left chest of the team's home uniforms since 1937.
- 1971 is the Cubs' last year in flannels. The home jersey is a white pinstripe button-front, devoid of any knit trim and featuring the Cubs' cartoon mascot on the left sleeve.
- "Cubs Style" numbers are used on the back—a distinctive, yet plain, font that the club has used for decades and continues to use through 2025.

1970-1971 Road

- While Cubs home jerseys are sacrosanct and have kept the same basic design for decades, the Cubs frequently change their road jerseys.
- The 1970–1971 flannel road jersey features plain blue lettering on light blue fabric. It is introduced in 1969 and changes again after 1971.
- “Cubs Style” numbers appear on both front and back, single-color (blue), with no player name on back

1973

In 1972, the Cubs switch to double knits, along with most other teams in MLB. The home jersey becomes a pullover, replacing the traditional button front, with wide royal blue sleeve-end trim and a royal blue V-neck. Blue pinstripes, and the familiar Cubs disc on the left chest. Identify by the tan/blue Cub patch on the sleeve, and the narrow 3/8" blue border around the Cubs crest on the front. One-color royal blue numbers appear on the back only, in the special Cubs number font. No player names are used.

Cubs jerseys are consistently tagged during the lengthy Wilson era. A detailed tag (usually player number, year, set, size) is sewn inside the collar. A small square with the year is sewn on the outside bottom of the shirt tail.

1972 Road

- As much as the Cubs' home jerseys are untouched by change, the team's road jerseys change every few years.
- 1972 is the team's first year in double knits, and, like the home jersey, the road version switches to a pullover design.
- Blue/white/red knit trim appears on the sleeve ends and at the neck.
- While "Chicago" remains arched across the front and Cubs-style numbers appear on both front and back, the numbers are now two-color blue/white.
- The front numbers are placed almost in a football-style position, centered in the middle of the jersey.

After just one season, the road jersey changes again in 1973. The new design closely resembles a pullover version of the 1971 button-front flannel road jersey. It is plainer, with the blue/white/red trim replaced by simple one-color blue. Cubs-font front numbers return to the left chest, with single-color numbers on the back as well. The cartoon Cub head patch appears on the left sleeve. No player names on the back.

In 1976, the Cubs join the growing list of teams adopting light blue road jerseys. Aside from the base color changing from the previous year's gray, the lettering and trim remain the same. Single-color Cubs-font front and back numbers are used, with no player names. In 1976, the jersey features the Cubs' 100th Anniversary patch on the left sleeve and the NL Centennial patch on the right. The Cartoon Cub head patch returns to the left sleeve in 1977, while the right sleeve is blank. The black armband for William K. Wrigley is added after April 14, 1977.

This design is nearly identical to the 1978 version but can be identified by the wide blue circle around the Cubs logo. Oddly, the ® registered trademark symbol now appears on the jersey logo. No player names appear on the back. Numbers are one-color royal blue in the special Cubs font. A round Cub patch with a thick red border is placed on the right sleeve. Rawlings becomes the uniform supplier in 1987, and their script appears on the right sleeve-end trim. The sleeve-end trim narrows slightly (1" instead of 1½"). Rawlings back numbers are proportioned slightly differently than the Wilson font, with flatter sides and squarer shapes.

The jersey features solid blue fabric with white/red knit trim at the sleeve ends and V-neck. Wilson is the team's supplier from 1982 through 1986. Player names and numbers on the back are two-color red/white. A red-bordered Round Cub face patch appears on the right sleeve. Special Cubs-style numbers are used.

Player name formats on the back are inconsistent during 1982–1986. Some sets feature vertically arched names, while others have radial arching—or none at all. Period news photos show both styles being worn simultaneously on the field. Some examples feature radial arch names sewn in a straight line. Vertical arching appears to be more common. These names are hand-crafted by Wilson's artist, with a narrower red layer and extra-wide white outlines—unlike most teams.

A very high percentage of these jerseys in the hobby have unoriginal names on the back, as they were often sent to the minors once their MLB service ended.

Rawlings takes over as the team's supplier in 1987, and all player names are now radially arched. The white Rawlings script is embroidered at the end of the right sleeve. The sleeve-end trim narrows slightly (1" instead of 1½"). Rawlings back numbers are slightly differently proportioned than Wilson's—featuring flatter sides and squarer shapes.

1992

Note the slight changes to the Russell Diamond Collection tag between 1992 and 1993.

The jersey changes to a button-front style. It retains the same Round Cub patch on the sleeve, the wide blue border around the Cubs front crest, and the royal blue sleeve-end trim. The blue neck trim is removed.

In 1993, names are added to the back (without nameplates), and both names and numbers are now two-color blue/red.

This one-year style is identified by the small "CHICAGO" wordmark on the front. The letters are nearly square in proportion and measure 2¼" high. The front features three-color red/blue/white numbers, while the back has two-color royal blue/white names and numbers. The team disc/logo patch appears on the left sleeve. All game-worn examples of this jersey include the 1990 All-Star patch sewn to the right sleeve.

- Identified by a new, taller 3¾" "CHICAGO" wordmark with small serifs, sewn straight across the front.
- Numbers are three-color red/royal blue/white on both front and back. During this three-year period, back numbers are a smaller-than-standard 7½" tall. Block name is two-color royal/white.
- The team disc/logo patch appears on the left sleeve; a Round Frowning Cub patch appears on the right.

The jersey is a button-front style, identified by plain sleeve ends. All blue trim is eliminated beginning in 1994. From the front, the design closely resembles the 1970–1971 style. A new version of the Frowning Cub sleeve patch is introduced. Player names, first added in 1993, continue to appear on the back in two-color royal blue/red. No nameplates are used.

Back numbers are smaller in 1994 (7½") and increase to 8½" in 1995–1996. The shapes also differ slightly. The front numbers are differently proportioned than the back numbers and are slightly larger from 1994–1996 than they were in 1993.

During the strike-shortened 1994 season and the two following years, the Cubs wore these unpopular road jerseys. These jerseys featured a Cubs script with an underline and three-color red/blue/white numbers on both front and back. Player names are two-color royal blue/white. A new version of the Frowning Cub sleeve patch appears on the sleeve.

Fans often complained that these uniforms resembled those of the Cuban National Team. After 1996, they were dropped in favor of a more traditional design.

A Phantom: The 1994-1996 Blue Alternate Jersey

This jersey style has long been a mystery to me. For every official style of jersey listed, we look for two important documents to back them up: game photos of them being worn, and examples that have been sold at auction, credibly authenticated—but preferably authenticated by me. In the case of this jersey style, a solid blue bodied jersey with red/white/blue knit sewn-in sleeve ends, and the short-lived CUBS script across the front, it was listed as an alternate jersey to be worn both at home and on the road. There is just one problem…and that is in over 25 years of searching, we have zero photos of the Cubs wearing these in games, and zero bona fide credible auctions of team-issued/game worn examples.

Many similar jerseys have been bought and sold by collectors over the years, with some claiming to be game-worn. "Team-issued" versions exist—like the one shown at top left—featuring a small 100% Polyester flag tab under the Russell tail tag, and no size tag in the neck. Some have an additional Velcro closure on the front — while not a definitive sign of team issue, this feature is generally not added to retail jerseys.

An additional factor adds to the confusion. In those years, the team also wore a blue mesh batting practice jersey that looked exactly like this solid-bodied game jersey. These were sometimes issued with player names on the back. Some Getty Images photos have been cited as evidence of the solid jerseys being worn in games, but further analysis of the low-resolution images revealed that the examples were actually mesh jerseys worn during pre-game warmups.

Chris Creamer (sportslogos.net)—perhaps even more obsessed with detail than I am—tracked the uniforms worn for EVERY GAME by the Cubs in 1994. He concluded that the team wore their blue BP jerseys in a game on May 2, 1994. This 30-second video highlight clip shows the Cubs players wearing the blue jersey without names on back. https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=R_z3NZYUfK-M&ab_channel=SW561. Unfortunately there are no close-ups that show whether the jerseys are mesh or solid fabric. Chris concluded that they were BP jerseys, but we can't be sure. One thing is for sure—I have never come across a credibly game-used one. The Jim Bullinger example I had been using in past editions as my example of the back of a game worn jersey is too low-resolution to confirm the fabric type, but I can see that it uses a nameplate on the back. Since the Cubs used nameplates on their 1994–1996 BP jerseys—but not on any game jerseys—I've concluded that the Bullinger jersey shown is a 1994 mesh BP jersey.

Thousands of these jerseys were likely produced for retail, based on how frequently they appear for sale online. Collectors frequently send them to me for customization. Even more strangely, when the Cubs celebrated Wrigley Field's 100th anniversary in 2014, this phantom jersey was the one they chose to wear to represent 1994. Go figure.

1994-1996: "Cubs" or "Cuba"?

The 1994–1996 Cubs game jersey design was relatively short-lived, lasting only three seasons. Many fans thought it resembled the Cuban national team's uniforms—an unfortunate but understandable comparison. The Cubs jerseys are shown at center, surrounded by images of various Cuban national team uniforms used over the years.

When the Cubs debuted new road uniforms in 1997, Russell was the manufacturer, and the 'CHICAGO' wordmark on the front was decidedly bold. Game photos from 1997–1998 clearly show the team wearing jerseys with thick lettering. Starting 1999, game photos show the team exclusively wearing thin-letter jerseys.

However, I have seen examples of the Russell "thick letter" jerseys year team-tagged 1999. And, I have also seen year--tagged "thin letter" variations from as early as 1998. This is puzzling, as game photos contradict the tagging. Perhaps older thick-letter jerseys were sold at the team shop as 1999 issues (see right example with LOA). They may have been used for Spring Training—but that's purely speculation.All thick-letter jerseys I have seen are made by Russell.

There is no difference on the backs of these two jersey variations. Two-color numbers on front and back, red/white in special Cubs font. Two-color Block names in royal/white.

What happened to 2007? In 2007, Cubs management decreed the team would wear only white or gray uniforms. While the blue alternate remained in the team style guide, it was never worn on the field. I have since seen examples of 2007-tagged blue jerseys, so it's likely that a set or two were produced! No surprise, really.

1997-2022 Sleeve Patch Detail Changes

1997, 14-Stars

1998– 2016, 16-Stars

From 1997–2022, the Cubs wore the National League logo patch on the right sleeve of their blue alternate jersey. It also appeared on their BP jerseys from 1997–2006, and again on Spring Training and BP jerseys from 2016–2022.

The number of stars on the crest represents the number of National League teams. In 1997, the patch featured 14 stars. The total increased to 16 in 1998, when the Diamondbacks and Brewers joined the National League. When the Astros moved from the NL to the AL in 2013, the official crest was updated from 16 to 15 stars. The Cubs continued wearing the outdated 16-star patch through 2016, before updating to the 15-star version for 2017–2022. The patch was discontinued after 2022 to make room for an advertising patch—which had not yet been sold—leaving the sleeve blank for all of 2023.

Aside from star count changes, a 1997 BP jersey variant features a much larger red scroll at the bottom. The patch is removed after the 2022 season.

In 1999, the road jersey's "CHICAGO" wordmark changes to a thinner-stroke, lighter font. No other elements are changed from 1998. Russell produces the jerseys in 1999, followed by Majestic from 2000–2019, and Nike from 2020–2023.

Tagged 1998, but..?

I've seen some jerseys in this style with '1998' team-year tags, including the Sosa example shown at right (top and bottom). I don't believe these were worn on the field. More likely, they were marketing pieces created to capitalize quickly on demand. It's just a hunch—but 1998 was a huge year for Sammy Sosa. When the supply of authentic 1998 jerseys ran out, it's possible that 'Team Issued' 1998 tags were added to 1999 jerseys to increase appeal. I could be wrong—but it's the most plausible explanation I've found.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric with several added elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable.

The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, along with one on the back tail called the "Air Belt" by Majestic. They also use kiss-cut layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10–20% lighter than traditional layered twill.

Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from earlier Cool Base jerseys.

2021-2023 City Connect

City Connect hits the North Side of Chicago in 2021, with the Cubs adding an uncharacteristically dark blue Flex Base jersey that Nike says represents "all 77 of Chicago's distinct neighborhoods."

It features "Wrigleyville" in an elegant arch reminiscent of a bridge, rendered in white/powder blue—colors drawn from the city's flag—across the front in lettering similar to Wrigley Field's famous marquee. Both front numbers (in powder blue) and back numbers (in white) use a custom, angular font. Each sleeve is ringed with wide powder blue braiding, while the left sleeve displays a patch with the "Chicago municipal device"—a "Y"-shaped symbol found throughout the city, representing the confluence of the north and south branches of the Chicago River.

"Respect Our Neighborhood"—oddly singular, given the "77 neighborhoods" theme—is embroidered in red above the jock tag, in a font that mimics signage found around Wrigley Field.

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys, with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a one-and-done season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Due to negative feedback—especially from MLB players—Nike rolled back some, but not all, of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys changed from earlier versions in several key ways:

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or a light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Road grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now sewn into the seams. Placket trim adornment remains, though the trim is now spaced more closely due to the narrower placket.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower—down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, with a steeper arch—nearly semi-circular in shape.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is always a reduced version of the back numbers. Previously, most teams used a font variant for front numbers—smaller but often wider and bolder than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches—and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches—change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or sublimated cloth/twill.
- All lettering is done using a new, more lightweight (thinner), matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all, jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforations on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

Less visible was a change in back number font to align more closely with the squarer version that had been listed as the club's font in the MLB Style Guide for more than 20 years, but had not been used on-field before. Even more minuscule, the longstanding registered trademark ® symbol, which appeared on the front logo patch since 1979, is also now gone. The Cubs do not use perforated twill on their home jersey numbers in 2024. Note the change in style code from Nike Flex Base (EJ1H) to VPE (EJHO). To start the season, the team patch varies sleeves based on each players' handedness. After August 1, the team adds a sponsor patch opposite the team sleeve patch.

2024 City Connect

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Cubs' City Connect jersey that was introduced only three seasons prior. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. Sleeve-end trim was sewn-in on the Flex Base version of this style, and now it is sewn-in, and the scale of the trim is now smaller than it had been before. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the "Wrigleyville" lettering, which is smaller than before, breaks across the placket slightly differently, though the new template allows for lettering to split on the natural break between the "L" and "E" where the split divided the "L" on Flex Base. This is a rare upgrade for letter splitting on VPE. The Cubs use perforated numbers on this version of the jersey. To start the season, the team patch varies sleeves based on each players' handedness. On August 1, the team adds a sponsor patch opposite the team sleeve patch. The style is retired after the 2024 season.

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025. This is the case for the Cubs, who return to the more rounded version of their number font, contrary to what was used in 2024. The registered trademark ® symbol, however, does not return to the team's front logo. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. Note also the use of the white Nike jocktag on front, one of a handful of uses of this new tag, which was typically black, and showed through white pants easily.

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. The Cubs have neither on this jersey. For teams that ditched custom name and number fonts for league-wide standardization, the 2023 team fonts return for 2025. This is the case for the Cubs, who return to the more rounded version of their number font, contrary to what was used in 2024. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

2025 Alternate Home

The Cubs introduce a brand new alternate jersey for the 2025 season, and they lean into powder blue, a color they last wore in 1981. Though this is not a City Connect jersey (the team will introduce a City Connect 2.0 in 2025, replacing the "Wrigleyville" 1.0 set) the Cubs still utilize storytelling about their history and city to explain the design choices for this new entry. According to the team's press release: "The jersey's chest patch combines details from early Cubs uniforms with typography inspired by blues-era instruments. The sleeve patch features custom lettering within a guitar pick, split by an electric bolt, representing Chicago's legacy as the birthplace of the electric blues. The custom numerals and nameplate take cues from early generation Cubs designs and decorative flourishes from blues-era typography." Though Chicago-inspired, the overall look is very reminiscent of the Montreal Expos road sets from 1969 into the 70s, which is certainly not a bad thing. This jersey is built on the VPE template, including the redundant jersey-color trim around the neck opening. However, it uses larger player names and numbering, and numbers are not perforated.

1980s-1993 Batting Practice

Earlier issues are seen with one-color, white, extra-bold Varsity numbers on the back. No names are used. BP jerseys are seldom date tagged, making it difficult to determine the specific years of use.

Later versions are sometimes seen with numbers in the Cubs style font, as with the two examples shown at bottom center and bottom right. It seems that font consistency on the back was not a priority for these team-issued jerseys, and each manufacturer followed their own standards.

August 8, 1981 — Batting Practice Jersey Worn in Game

On August 8 (an exhibition game against the White Sox), the Cubs wore blue Wilson batting practice jerseys in the game—verified after finding video of these games online. These jerseys had the Cubs' special font for the back numbers, not the Varsity style numbers usually seen. I doubt that a special set of jerseys was made for the players to wear; rather, this points to the lack of consistency and documentation of BP jerseys from that era. The Wilson-made jersey shown here is said to be from then, though I have no definitive proof.

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the pre-season. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Cubs use their regular season blue alternate as a basis for their Spring Training jersey, including the NL logo patch on the right sleeve. The name and back numbers are red patterned twill/white. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the left sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "AZ" representing where the Cubs spend Spring Training.

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before. The Cubs again use their regular season blue alternate as a basis for their spring training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the left sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “AZ” representing where the Cubs spend spring training. A very-slightly revised 15-star version of the NL patch replaces the 16-star version used previously (detailed on an earlier page).

2017-2019 Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Cubs jersey is royal blue with red back and underarm gussets. The walking cub logo, also on their alternate jerseys, appears on the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank, and the Cubs do not personalize these with player numbers on the sleeve as most other teams do.

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts, but now simplified using only one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The Cubs use their regular-season blue alternate as their base. The name and back numbers are sewn on in red patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "AZ" representing their Spring Training home.

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey back names and numbers abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns. The Cubs use their regular-season blue alternate as the base for this design, adding a new-for-2019 CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "AZ," referencing their Spring Training home. The name and back numbers are red/white.

2020-2023 Spring Training

Spring Training jerseys are simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates. For 2020–2023, the Cubs use their regular-season blue alternate, with red/white name and back numbers. The NL logo patch is sewn on the right sleeve through 2022 only.

1992 Turn Back the Clock to 1948

1948 Original

The Cubs visited the Phillies on June 21, 1992, for a Turn Back the Clock to 1948 game. The double-knit uniform is made by Russell, and all ornamentation is felt. It uses very tall Cubs-style numbers, with no names on the back. The Russell "R" logo is embroidered on the right sleeve in blue/red. An original 1948 road jersey is shown at left. The lettering on the replica is bolder than that on the original.

1997 Turn Back the Clock to 1912

These blue jerseys are replicas of the Cubs' 1911–1912 road uniform, worn on June 16, 1997, against the White Sox. Knit uniforms were made by Wilson. Player numbers were not worn in 1912, but these replicas include back numbers in a font called NCAA.

2008 Turn Back the Clock to 1948

To celebrate the 60th anniversary of Cubs television broadcasts on WGN-TV, the team and the visiting Braves staged a “Turn Back the Clock to 1948” day on June 12, 2008. The TV broadcast began in black and white with 1948-era camera angles (no center-field batter shots, no instant replay), but switched to a modern format in the later innings. The Cubs and Braves dressed accordingly, and this was the first TBTC game at Wrigley, as the Cubs had played their previous TBTC games on the road. Back numbers are one-color royal blue, in the Cubs’ traditional number font. Overall, the uniforms were close to the originals but not exact, as the inset of an original 1948 jersey shows. The Cubs disc on the replica is larger than on the original, with more space between the letters.

On May 4 vs. the Dodgers, both teams turn back the clock to 1944.

The uniforms for both teams are made by newcomer Bobcat Athletic. These are accurate replicas, featuring Cubs-style numbers on the back and a Ron Santo memorial patch on the right sleeve. The jerseys feature unusually long sleeves, despite this not being typical of 1944 styles.

1918

On May 21, the Red Sox and Cubs wore 1918 uniforms to mark the Cubs' first visit to Fenway Park since the 1918 World Series. Based on the few available photos of the 1918 Cubs, this appears to be a masterful recreation by Majestic. The original uniforms did not have numbers on the back, but the replicas use one-color navy blue Varsity Bold numbers.

2012 “Turn Back the Century” to 1912

The Giants staged a rather elaborate “Turn Back the Century” game on a bright afternoon in San Francisco, June 2, 2012. The large scoreboards were turned off, and organ music replaced the usual fare. The Cubs’ uniforms—navy blue 1912 road suits—were masterfully recreated by Majestic, featuring a pullover design with a four-button front. They appear highly accurate, aside from the addition of back numbers, which were not worn in 1912.

2013 Memorial Day

Read the full story on MLB's Memorial Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

Playing the cross-town White Sox and participating in this all-MLB May 27, 2013 spectacle of teams wearing camouflage-trimmed uniforms, the Cubs were among the unlucky teams whose gray jerseys featured desert camo twill outlined with white—resulting in nearly "invisible" uniforms. As game photos show, the jerseys appeared completely blank from the stands.

Original 1909 home jersey

On June 29, 2013, the Cubs took part in the Seattle Mariners' Turn Back the Clock to 1909 game, wearing replicas of their 1909 road uniforms—gray with navy pinstripes and the unusual feature of the city name "CHICAGO" spelled out vertically on the placket. Photos of surviving 1909 uniforms suggest these replicas are as accurate as possible, with most players obligingly wearing their socks high, as was customary in that era. The only nod to modern times was the addition of back numbers, which were not worn in 1909.

2014 Memorial Day/Military Day

For Memorial Day on May 26, 2014, the Cubs—again on the road—wear their new alternate nostalgia road uniforms, with desert camouflage twill replacing the navy and red lettering on both front and back. Unhelpfully outlined with white, the result was again invisibility—perhaps fitting, as that is the actual purpose of camouflage. Cubs players appeared, from the seats, to be wearing blank gray suits.

These same uniforms were worn in Pittsburgh on June 10 for the Pirates' Military Appreciation Day game, where the Pirates again wore their Memorial Day camouflage-accented uniforms.

The 100th Birthday of Wrigley Field

The 2014 season marked the 100th anniversary of Wrigley Field's opening in 1914. To celebrate the well-loved park's history, the Cubs teamed with Majestic to create ten different sets of throwback uniforms—one for each decade of the park's existence. The first uniform worn was that of the 1914 Chi-Feds, debuted during the 100th birthday game at the stadium on April 23. The other nine uniforms are worn on "Throwback Sundays" throughout the rest of the season.

Additionally, a new alternate road uniform (pictured earlier in this chapter) was also released and was designed to resemble the team's road uniforms of the 1920s. The quality of the Cubs' research and of the resulting Majestic reproductions is simply outstanding. On each page that follows, we have provided photos of an actual uniform from the era being honored for your comparison. This exercise showswhat passionate research and careful execution can accomplish. In each of the Turn Back the Clock games, the visitor wore period uniforms as well, and these teams' uniforms are depicted in the chapters devoted to each of those teams.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1914 Federal League Chi-Feds

While the Cubs existed in 1914 (Wrigley Field's first year), the park was home to the Chicago team of the Federal League, known as the Federals or "Chi-Feds." Great care was taken by the Cubs in the accuracy of all the uniforms created for the 2014 celebration. This game on April 23 showcased the first decade of the ballpark, and the pinstriped cream-colored uniforms appear to be perfectly recreated when compared to period photos. Player numbers on the back were added as a modern touch, although they did not come into use until the 1930s.

The guest Diamondbacks obligingly dressed in the uniforms of the Kansas City Federal League team. After all, Arizona had only become a state in 1912, and if any baseball was being played there, it likely didn't involve road trips to Chicago—nearly 1,500 miles away!

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1929

On May 4, 2014, the Cubs and the visiting 1929 St. Louis Cardinals played a Turn Back the Clock game in period uniforms representing the 1920s. The photographs show that Majestic once again did a masterful job recreating the teams' uniforms. The Cubs' uniforms were made of cream-colored knit fabric. They were pullovers with five-button fronts and period-correct two-tiered "sun collars."

Back numbers were added in red/blue using the historic McAuliffe font, though numbers were not used in 1929. The font was once common across MLB but is now associated with the Red Sox, the only team that still uses it.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1937

On May 18, 2014, the Cubs and Brewers participated in a Turn Back the Clock game honoring the 1930s. A comparison with an original period jersey shows just how accurate the Majestic reproductions are. They use a zipper front and a strip of blue knit trim on both the placket and sleeve ends.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1942

On June 8, 2014, the Cubs wore a vest-style uniform replicating their 1942 home design. The jersey includes two notable details that enhance its realism. First, it features the “HEALTH” shield patch on the right chest, worn by most MLB teams in 1942 as part of the war effort—encouraging all U.S. citizens to stay healthy so they could contribute to the war effort. Second, specially made undershirts featured bold red striping with white sleeve tops. Players completed the look by showing their striped socks.

The visitors were the Miami Marlins, who were outfitted in the gray uniforms of the 1940s Miami Sun Sox minor league team.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1964

As if the Cubs didn't have enough uniform variety in 2014, the Phillies commissioned a set of knit replicas of the Cubs' 1964 uniforms for the Turn Back the Clock to 1964 game in Philadelphia on June 13, 2014. As you can see from the photos, the uniforms were masterfully recreated by Majestic in every detail. "CHICAGO" lettering on the front and player numbers on the back were sewn in blue over red twill. The cartoon Cub patch appeared on the left sleeve. Blue/red/blue knit trim was used around the collar and near the sleeve ends, as it was on the originals

On June 22, 2014, the Cubs and Pirates wore knit reproductions of their 1953 uniforms for a game at Wrigley Field. The Cubs' were near-exact replicas, as seen in these comparison photos. These 1953 uniforms closely resemble—but are not exact copies of—the Turn Back the Clock uniforms worn by the Cubs in 2008, which featured a slightly smaller team disc wordmark on the left chest.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1969

On July 13, 2014, the Cubs and the visiting Atlanta Braves reprised the 1960s with 1969 uniforms. As has been the case with all the other uniforms worn during this yearlong party, the uniforms were spot-on in detail, including the Cartoon Cub sleeve patch and the 1969 100th anniversary MLB patch. Cream-colored, blue-pinstriped fabric was used to resemble the flannel that served as standard issue in 1969.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1978

On July 27, 2014, the Cardinals visited and the Cubs switched things up, wearing replicas of their road uniforms from 1978. Cubs' home uniforms remained nearly unchanged, to the untrained eye, for many years, but road jerseys were changed several times to match the styles. The 1978 road jersey was a very "1970s" powder blue pullover with white pinstripes. The word "Chicago" is arched on the front, with single-color blue numbers in the Cubs' special font on both front and back. Good research is evident again, as these uniforms feature the Cartoon Cub patch on the left sleeve and no names on back, as was correct for this style, which was worn only in 1978. The visiting Cardinals wore 1978 throwback home white pullovers.

© GameWornGuides.com

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1988

On August 10, 2014, to the casual observer, Cubs home uniforms appear unchanged from 1972 to the present. Looking more closely, the 1988 home uniform was a pullover design with a royal blue knit V-neck and sleeve ends, featuring Cubs font numbers on back but without player names, and the round cartoonish Frowning Cub on the left sleeve. Again, nostalgia is faithfully executed by Majestic, with the tiniest exception—the little "TM" mark on the Cubs disk used in 1988 was missing from these copies. The visiting Tampa Bay Rays wore pretend "faux-back" softball-style uniforms in bright yellow and two shades of blue that presuppose how the team might have dressed in the 1980s, before they existed.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1994

Truly an odd choice—since while this was officially listed as a jersey for the 1994–1996 Cubs, there is no evidence that they were worn or even issued to players. We suspect that they never made it to the team issue stage in 1994. Nevertheless, the MLB 125th anniversary patch, as worn on the right sleeve during that strike-shortened season, is present, along with the re-vised-for-1994 Frowning Cub patch on the left sleeve. Player names appear on the back, with numbers in Cubs-style font, all in red outlined in white.

The Orioles visited on August 24, 2014, and wore copies of their 1994 road uniforms.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 2008

This uniform variant barely deserves a footnote, as the Cubs uniform from 2008 is identical to the ones worn in 2014. But on September 7, 2014, the Cubs commemorated their rare (and very brief) trip to the playoffs in 2008 anyway, wearing the current team home pinstripe uniform—but on that day simply without the Wrigley Field birthday sleeve patch on the right sleeve. These were a separate set of uniforms made for the day, tagged in the collar as "2008"—because by 2014, no team bothers to remove and then re-sew patches on uniforms for the whole team for a single day's use, as they would have in 1980 or earlier. These were surely marketed to fans in the "game worn" Cubs team store. The visiting Pirates did not throw back to 2008, when they would have been wearing road gray vests—and it's unlikely anyone noticed.

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1990

When the Cubs announced 10 throwbacks to celebrate the 100th anniversary of Wrigley Field in 2014, it seemed like a lot. Apparently, the team truly thought the throwbacks were successful, as they started participating in turn back the clock games at a rapid pace after that. The Cubs kicked off their 2015 TBTC slate on April 24 in a road game against the Reds. Both teams wore 1990 uniforms. The gray Majestic knit jersey is an excellent copy of the one-year-only "small CHICAGO" style. Front numbers are red/royal blue/white; names and Cubs-font numbers on the back are royal blue/white—just like the originals. The 1990 All-Star Game patch appropriately adorns the right sleeve, while the Cubs logo patch appears on the left.

2015 “Pink Out” Batting Practice

On May 11, Cubs Charities held their annual “Pink Out” event to promote breast cancer awareness. Fans in the bleachers received pink t-shirts to wear, and other fans were invited to wear pink to “Pink Out” the stands at Wrigley. The pink extended to the field as well, with all Cubs players wearing a pink BP jersey during warm-ups to honor the occasion. The jersey’s front panels—including the sleeves and portions of the side panels—were rendered in pink, while the rest of the jersey and the logos and lettering remained the same as the usual version. The Ernie Banks memorial patch appeared on the right sleeve. Cubs Charities auctioned the jerseys after the game, with proceeds going to a charity that provides mammograms for underinsured and uninsured women.

2015 Memorial Day

Note an odd feature: While Cubs home jerseys have had the small "Registered" mark "® " embroidered near the bottom of the "C" in the team jersey logo since 1979, that mark is strangely absent on all of the Cubs jerseys that have special colored twill, like this one and the home special events jerseys shown on the following pages.

After two straight Memorial Day road games, the Cubs hosted the 2015 Memorial Day game at Wrigley Field on May 25. Like all other teams, the top layer of their back lettering twill was replaced with desert camo, outlined in red. The "Cubs" wordmark on the front logo patch also received the camo treatment, while the rest of the patch remained unchanged. Overall, the effect was marginally better than the past two years of camo on road gray, though the camo-on-white front logo was still difficult to discern. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag was changed to dark green/khaki/white rather than the typical color scheme from 2014. The Ernie Banks memorial patch adorned the right sleeve.

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1915 Federal League Whales

Derek Damian Collection

Steve Kraljic collection

The Cubs throw back to the 1915 Federal League Chicago Whales in a May 31 home game against the Royals, who are attired as the 1915 Federal League Kansas City Packers. These cream-color, half-button knit jerseys by Majestic feature a red/blue "C" with a blue whale sewn on the front and blue numbers in block on the back—which the Whales did not wear in 1915. Note also the navy blue sun collar on the jersey, a period-appropriate touch. With this throwback game, the Cubs have now worn every single Chicago Federal League home jersey in history—all two of them.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palette might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Cubs wear their home white jerseys with the red-background version of the starred twill, which is decorated with large white stars.

For the front of the jersey, the word "Cubs" in the logo patch is in this twill on a white field, and the thick border is in blue. This setup makes the Cubs one of a few teams (along with the Reds and Marlins) to have more than two colors on their front logo for this promotion. Back numbers are in the star twill outlined in blue. The front logo patch also lacks the registered trademark symbol seen on typical home jerseys. Player names on back are in blue. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve, while the Ernie Banks memorial patch—usually located there—is moved to the right front chest of the jersey.

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1958 (Home)

Both Chicago clubs lost legendary figures before the 2015 season—Ernie Banks for the Cubs and Minnie Minoso for the White Sox. When the two teams met for interleague games in each ballpark, they honored both players with throwback uniforms. For the July 12 game at Wrigley, the Cubs wore this Majestic knit 1958 home jersey. A testament to the Cubs' relative consistency with their home uniforms, this is an accurate and well-rendered version of the team's 1958 uniform. Numbers on the back are royal blue/red in the Cubs' signature font, and all players wore number 14 that day to honor Banks.

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1958 (Road)

For the August 14 interleague road game on the South Side against the White Sox, the Cubs wore full-knit replicas of their 1958 road jerseys by Majestic. These uniforms were almost identical to the Turn Back the Clock to 1964 road jerseys the team wore the year prior, minus the cartoon Cub patch on the left sleeve. They were excellent reproductions of the originals, featuring “Chicago” lettering on front and player numbers on back in blue/red twill. Blue/red/blue knit trim circles the collar and the sleeve ends, as it did on the real thing.

2015 Turn Back the Clock to 1945

The Cubs wrapped up their five-game Turn Back the Clock series in 2015 with a 1945 home throwback in an August 19 game against the Tigers, who wore 1945 road uniforms. The game recreated the 1945 World Series matchup. The Majestic knit jerseys featured royal blue numbers on the back in the Cubs' traditional number font, though the numbers are rendered in a bolder style than on the originals. In 1945, the Cubs did not wear the WWII "Stars and Stripes" shield patch on their jerseys, as several other teams did—and this absence is faithfully recreated here.

2015 Gold Batting Practice

On September 28, the Cubs created a similar fundraising promotion to their breast cancer “Pink Out” from a few months earlier. This time, the beneficiary was childhood cancer charities, and the jerseys adopted the movement’s signature gold color. Contrary to the Pink Out jerseys—where the new color was added to the front—the gold appears on the back and underarm panels. The rest of the logos and numbers remain the same as the normal jerseys. The Ernie Banks memorial patch is on the right sleeve. The jerseys were auctioned off, with proceeds benefiting childhood cancer charities via Cubs Charities, the Anthony Rizzo Family Foundation, the Jason Motte Foundation, Jon Lester’s NVRQT campaign, and Joe Maddon’s Respect 90 Foundation.

2016 Mother's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Mother's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

For the first time in 2016, all teams wore special pink-trimmed uniforms on Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys were made in Flex Base construction, with a rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also featured the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on the left chest (a holdover from prior seasons), while the Majestic sleeve logo was rendered in pink, and the MLB Silhouetted Batter patch on the back of the collar appeared in dark pink/light pink/white. The Cubs home white jerseys have the front logo lettering sewn in pink with dark gray circle on a white field. They were one of a few teams (along with the Reds and Marlins) to have more than two colors on their front logo for this promotion, which helped increase the legibility of the logo's small details. Notably, the front logo also lacked the registered trademark symbol found on regular home jerseys. Player names on back were sewn in single-color dark gray, while back numbers were pink/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches were also changed to shades of pink, gray, and white.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at the back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template—with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines—makes this set more legible than those from prior years. The Cubs apply the camouflage trimmings to their home white jerseys for the game on May 30. The red lettering on the front Cubs logo patch becomes woodland camo, while the blue circle around the team name turns black. Oddly, the front logo also loses the registered trademark symbol that is evident on the typical home jerseys. Player names appear in single-color black, and back numbers are rendered in woodland camo with a black outline. Like other teams, their sleeve patches are reduced to shades of green, gray, and black, and trim elements are also simplified to single-color black.

2016 Father's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Father's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms on Father's Day, Sunday, June 19. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction, with a rubberized tag applied to the left front tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on the left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back-of-collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white. The Cubs wear their home white jerseys with the front logo lettering in light blue, surrounded by a dark gray circle on a white field. They are one of two teams (along with the Marlins) to have more than two colors on their front logo for this promotion, which improves the legibility of the logo's small details. Oddly, the front logo also loses the registered trademark symbol that is evident on the regular home jerseys. The player names on back are sewn in single-color dark gray, while back numbers are light blue/dark gray.

2016 Independence Day

MLB introduces a new Independence Day jersey template for 2016, now built on Majestic's Flex Base jersey construction. Each jersey includes a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Cubs are at home and wear their home jersey. All clubs had a choice of two styles of star-spangled twill for lettering, and the Cubs selected the red twill version with blue outlines for both front lettering and back numbers, along with a blue player name on back. From a distance, the July 4 jersey appears very similar to the standard Cubs home jersey, as the star pattern on the red twill fades from view a few feet away. Oddly, the front logo also loses the registered trademark symbol that is evident on the regular home jerseys. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve, which here replaces the Wrigley Field anniversary patch. Team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue, replacing team colors. However, the difference is almost indiscernible, with the walking cub logo only slightly darker blue than usual.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1916

When the Federal League Chicago Whales folded after the 1915 season, their now-vacant ballpark quickly found a new occupant. The NL Cubs moved right in and played their first game at what is now Wrigley Field on April 20, 1916, against Cincinnati. Some argue that the Cubs also inherited the Whales' uniforms, as the 1916 Cubs jersey looked quite a bit like the Whales' 1915 entry — which had also been worn as a throwback in 2015.

For this July 6 game—appropriately against the Reds, who also wore 1916 uniforms—the Cubs donned a Majestic knit half-button jersey with a black sun collar, black knit trim on the sleeve openings, and black block numbers on the back. These numbers, of course, were not historically accurate for the era. A red/black wishbone "C," inhabited by the first appearance of a "Walking Cub" logo, adorns the left front chest.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1988

On July 20, in a Wrigley Field day game between the Cubs and Mets, both teams wore 1988 throwback uniforms. The Cubs' Majestic knit pullovers are identical to the 1988 home throwbacks worn in 2014, and are spot-on recreations of the originals—minus one tiny detail: the "®" registered trademark symbol that appeared on jerseys starting in 1979. Neither TBTC version of that jersey includes the symbol.

However, all other details—including the absence of names on back, royal blue back numbers in the special Cubs font, and the round "Frowning Cub" patch on the left sleeve—are all accurate.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1981

On August 6 in Oakland, the Cubs and A's both throw back to the 1980s. The Cubs wear a Majestic knit replica of their 1981 road blue jersey with white pinstripes, featuring royal blue letters throughout, with front and back numbers in the Cubs' special font. Oddly, the numbers here appear more squared than on the originals, and the front lettering looks narrower. During this jersey's original run, names were vertically arched, although here they are applied in a simple radial arch.

The Cubs are usually very detail-oriented and accurate with their many throwbacks, but since they were the road team for this game, it is likely the A's were responsible for ordering the uniforms—and may not have paid attention to the small details in the same way the Cubs do.

2017 Special Opening Series Gold Trimmed

The Cubs wore gold-trimmed jerseys to celebrate their 2016 World Series win for their home opening series on April 10 and 12, 2017. The front disk had a subtle extra embroidered gold border. The back numbers are metallic gold twill outlined with royal blue, and the MLB logo patch on the back of the neck is gold/red/blue. The 2016 World Series Champions patch is on the right sleeve.

2017 Mother's Day

Pink-trimmed Mother's Day jerseys return on May 13–14, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left-tail Majestic heat-applied vinyl locker tag and team inventory tag inside the bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon glued on the left chest; the pink Majestic sleeve logo; and the dark pink/light pink/white ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter appliqué stitched on the back of the collar.

All multi-colored lettering uses the lightweight twill style. The Cubs wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white.

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are difficult to distinguish, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch appears on the right sleeve, featuring five black stars representing the five branches of the U.S. military. All trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Cubs apply this style to their road gray jerseys as worn on May 27–29, 2017, and May 28, 2018.

2017 Negro Leagues Tribute (1910s Leland Giants)

An independent Negro League team that called Chicago home, the Leland Giants were named after their player/manager/owner Frank Leland—and their uniforms were unique. The Cubs took to the field in Pittsburgh on June 16, 2017, for a Negro Leagues tribute game wearing these striking jerseys from the mid-1910s. Gray full-knit, half-button-downs with collars, made by Majestic, proclaimed the team name in white, downward-slanted cursive on a similarly slanted bright red field. Red block numbers on back—though these were likely not worn by the team originally—complete a look that might seem improbable if not confirmed by period photography, as shown in the team photo above right.

Light blue-trimmed Father's Day jerseys return on June 17–18, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left-tail Majestic tagging and set tagging inside the bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon glued on the left chest, the light blue Majestic embroidered sleeve logo, and the ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter patch on the back collar in dark royal blue/light blue/white.

The Cubs wear road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in light blue/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are light blue/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white.

2017 Independence Day (Road)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, with a slightly less busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill — appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué patch is sewn on the back of the neck.

On July 1–2, 2017, the Cubs wear their road gray jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering, with front and back numbers also in blue patterned twill/red. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. While other teams modify their team sleeve patches to make them embroidered in red, white, and blue, the Cubs can use their standard sleeve patches without alteration.

2017 Independence Day (Home)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, with a slightly less busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the new twill — appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base, with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué patch is sewn on the back of the neck.

On July 4, 2017, the Cubs wear their home white jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. The front logo also loses the registered trademark symbol that is evident on the regular home jerseys. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. The Cubs' sleeve patch remains unaltered, as it is already red, white, and blue.

To highlight players' personalities and appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard colors and designs for cleats, bats, and other gear, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a right-sleeve patch where players can honor special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch and the back-of-collar logo feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood.

Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied to the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are rendered in single-color Varsity, and the player names in 2¾″ single-color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017, and August 24–26, 2018, the Cubs wear jerseys with royal blue bodies and powder blue sleeves, featuring white nicknames and powder blue numbers on the back. The sleeves and V-neck opening are trimmed in wide powder blue/white/powder blue bands. The front features their "C-ubs-in-a-circle" logo from their home jerseys, here rendered in red/white/powder blue kiss-cut lightweight twill. The front logo also loses the registered trademark symbol that is evident on their regular home jerseys.

The 2018 Independence Day jerseys repeat the pattern introduced in 2017, featuring printed twill with a design of stars and stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the lettering — red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging, and a ChromaFlex rubberized “stars and stripes” pattern MLB patch is sewn on the back of the neck.

On July 2–4, 2018, the Cubs adjust the front of the previous year’s Independence Day jerseys, changing the “C-ubs” logo to red, set inside a blue patterned twill circle. The front logo also loses the registered trademark symbol that is evident on the regular home jerseys. Jersey backs are the same as in 2017, with red names and blue patterned twill/red numbers. As before, the Cubs’ standard team sleeve patch is used, already embroidered in red, white, and blue.

2019 Turn Back the Clock to 1969

On July 16, 2019, the Cubs throw back 50 years to their classic 1969 home jersey. Compared to the original shown at left, these are highly accurate reproductions. Aside from the slightly lower placement of the back numbers compared to the original 1969 set, these cream-colored, full-knit replicas by Majestic match in every respect—including the 1969 MLB 100th anniversary patch on the right sleeve and the correct 1969 Cartoon Cub patch on the left.

2019 Little League Classic

The Little League Classic, an MLB game played in Williamsport, PA, home of the Little League World Series, was a major element of the Players Weekend promotion when it started in 2017. The game served as a preview, of sorts, of the colorful, Little League-inspired uniforms worn for the Major League promotion a week later. Then, 2019 brought a stark monochrome version of the Players Weekend look, so to stick to its roots, the Little League Classic had to change….to stripes. Wide chest stripes with team nickname inside, not unlike the Cubs' crosstown rival White "SOX" wore in the 1980s. On August 18, the Cubs sport these gray Majestic Cool Base pullovers for the Classic, with red/white "CUBBIES" emblazoned on front, centered in the powder blue/royal blue/powder blue horizontal chest stripe. A blue V-neck and sleeves complete the look, while back numbers appear in red/white in the Cubs usual font, and royal blue player nicknames (a holdover from Players Weekend) surmount the back numbers. Also returning from previous Players Weekend games is the right-sleeve CFX patch, featuring an adaptation of the MLB logo showing the evolution of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood, with a space for the player to personalize with names of people instrumental in his life. A CFX Little League Classic logo patch appears on the right sleeve.

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Cubs wear a white version of their home jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in white/gray with gray nickname on back. The front logo also loses the registered trademark symbol that is evident on the regular home jerseys.

2022 Field of Dreams Game

For the August 11, 2022 incarnation of the Field of Dreams game in Dyersville, Iowa, the Cubs throw it back to their late-1920s/early-1930s look. And in a way, to 2014 as well, which is when they last wore a turn back the clock design just like this. Nike made this latest version -- half-pullovers in a cream-colored Cool Base material, with a five-button front and period-correct two-tiered “sun collars.” The left chest sports the Cubs’ former “wishbone C” logo in red/navy with a navy patch featuring a quaint bear cub holding a baseball bat. Sleeve ends and the collar are ringed with a wide navy/white/navy braid, while the neck and short placket have navy knit trim. Though they would not have been used at the time this jersey represents, back numbers are added here in red/navy in McAuliffe font, once worn by many teams, but now only seen regularly on the Red Sox. Similarly anachronistic are the MLB and Nike logos, which are a sign of our times.

This prototype of the Cubs' powder blue 1976–1977 road jersey is so very close to what the team wore on the field with one important exception—all of the lettering is two-color blue/white rather than single-color blue. What these photos don't show is if the Cartoon Cub patch is on the left sleeve like the jerseys that were used on the field. It is likely if it had been there, it would have been documented by the auction house that had this item, so it was probably never applied for this sample. The jersey's tag is appropriate for the 1974–1977 era of Wilson jerseys.

1977 Prototype Road

Bill Henderson Collection

This powder blue with white pinstripes road jersey carries a team-spec 1977, set 1 tag on the tail. Number 44 in 1977 was pitcher Dave Giusti, who at 5' 11" and 195 lbs. would have been a perfect fit in this Wilson pro-tagged size 44 jersey.

But wait - the Cubs did not start to use this style road jersey until 1978. The 1976-1977 road jersey was solid powder blue with royal blue trim. The powder blue chalk pinstripe jersey didn't appear until 1978, and the 1978 version was the only one with this tan and blue style Cartoon Cub patch on the sleeve. There is no name on back on my example, nor does one ever appear to have been sewn there. Yet the player number is sewn low to leave room for one (names on back would not appear on Cubs road jerseys until 1979).

A critical eye will note that the "CHICAGO" lettering on the front is slightly less bold than the normal for either 1977 or 1978. Finally, there is an odd felt rectangle sewn on the spot inside the collar in the normal place that the Cubs sew team tagging. What is this? My best guess is that it is a Wilson prototype submitted to the team for consideration of a new style for 1977; one that was delayed until 1978.

Note: In the last edition we included a page showing Cubs jerseys with 2002 Muscular Dystrophy Association (MDA) "Jerseys off their Backs" patches on the chest. My Cubs experts inform me that this was not an MLB event, and likely these were Iowa Cubs jerseys.

2000-2001: Six Cubs Captains

Captain's patches are a more familiar element of hockey and football jerseys in U.S. sports, but there have been occasions where they've been worn by baseball players, too.

In 2000–2001, the Cubs made the unprecedented move of naming six players as captains, and honoring each with a captain's "C" on their jersey sleeves. Usually, a team has no more than one captain, or perhaps a captain and one or two assistant captains, so naming four each year was unusual, and giving them all the "C" was even more unorthodox.

Sammy Sosa and Kevin Tapani were captains in both 2000 and 2001. Mark Grace and Rick Aguilera were captains in 2000, while Eric Young and Joe Girardi were captains in 2001.

The images here show examples of all six players donning the captains "C" across those two seasons, including home, road, and alternate jerseys.

2001-2003 Prototype Home?

While the Cubs have not altered their home jersey design in decades, that doesn't mean they have never considered alternatives.

I have no confirmation that this vest-look jersey with sewn-on raglan-style sleeves is a prototype, and it could be home-made or have been made for a minor league Cubs affiliate, but the presence of the 2001–2003 Russell Authentic Collection tag with the red markings on it is enough to pique my curiosity and warrant its inclusion. Red-marked tagging generally indicates an item not intended for retail sale that was rejected for on-field use and sent to the discounters. A close-up of the MLB Silhouetted Batter patch reveals that, oddly, it is black and green as would have been used on a Rays uniform.

2001-2003 Prototype Road?

It's an educated guess, but this attractive gray-bodied jersey with red, white and blue trimmed sleeve ends (identical to the 1992–2004 Montreal Expos road jersey body) could have been a proposed design for a Cubs road jersey as offered by Russell for the team's consideration. The Russell tail tag is in the 2001–2003 style, and the small size/100% nylon flag tag beneath coupled with the lack of a neck size tag make it look like a team-issue blank. The Cubs disk on the chest oddly has the R trademark symbol embroidered in nearly-invisible white thread on a white background. Red staining on the tail tag looks like it had been marked for discard with a red marker that someone tried to remove.

More Oddballs

Below: The very definition of minutia! The Cubs' wore a sleeve patch with 14 stars at its top in 1997 only before it switched to 16 stars in 1998 (one star for each NL team that existed that year) .... so why does Sammy Sosa's 2004 jersey have the 1997-only 14-star patch on the sleeve? My guess is that he had extra jerseys made for himself to sell as game worn memorabilia, and these were made off-cycle by Majestic in a special order, and they simply used the older version of the patch by mistake. After all, who would notice, besides us? Recently we received one of these to authenticate. That document is linked below.

Above: 2013 or 2014 home jersey with a pale desert camouflage wordmark was not used by the Cubs. Perhaps they were made in anticipation of a Military Appreciation game that did not occur? Retail tagging indicates that perhaps a quantity was made for resale. The Cubs were on the road for camo-themed Memorial Days of both 2013 and 2014, and so wore road grays in both games. This photo is from 2014, so it was not the 2015 jersey.

Right: Andre Dawson appearing at the 1991 All Star game in Toronto shows that, with team patches on both sleeves of his road jersey that he has run out of real estate to apply the All-Star patch, and it is sewn nearly on the top of his shoulder.

Commemorative Patches

- For all their years of history, the Cubs have worn relatively few commemorative patches.
- 1976: Team 100th Anniversary patch
- 1976* (see comment on next page): Black armbands are sometimes found on Cubs jerseys
- 1977: William K. Wrigley armband after April 14
- 1984 Postseason: Patch worn on the right sleeve to commemorate winning the NL Eastern Division
- 1990: All-Star Game
- 1998: Two memorial patches. Harry Caray round patch on left sleeve, Jack Brickhouse "Hey Hey" memorial patch above the NL Crest on right sleeve of blue alternate. On home and road, Caray on right sleeve and Brickhouse on left, above the Walking Cub patch. Brickhouse memorial worn after August 6, 1998.
- 2000, March 29–30: Opening Series in Japan vs. Mets - AIU Insurance Co. sponsorship worn on right sleeve of road jersey. Likely removed afterward.
- 2001, June 26: "20,000" patch to mark the Cubs' 20,000th regular season game, worn right sleeve of road jersey. The Cubs were the first MLB team to reach this mark.

- 2011: “10” Patch for Ron Santo (all season)
- 2012, July 22 and 27: Ron Santo special Hall of Fame Patch worn the day of his HOF induction and on “Ron Santo Day” at Wrigley. It is different from the one worn the whole prior year. This patch was seen on the home (7/27) pinstripe and blue alternate jerseys (7/22) only.
- 2014: Wrigley Field 100th Anniversary, worn all season on home pinstripe jersey only.
- 2015: “14” disc for Ernie Banks, all season, also worn on batting practice jersey. Normally worn on the home jersey right sleeve, and blue alternate left sleeve, but also shown here worn above the postseason patch, and on the chest during the All-Star game by Cubs participants.

Regarding unknown armbands found on some 1976 game worn jerseys, One of our most knowledgeable Cubs experts comments: “In 1977, the Cubs wore a black armband in honor of P.K. Wrigley, who died April 12, 1977. But that wouldn’t have gone on a jersey with the 1976 patch—not even in spring training, since Wrigley didn’t pass away until after the season had started.

Speculation: Longtime Cubs PA announcer Pat Pieper died October 22, 1974. The black armband MIGHT have been worn in 1975, with a 1976 patch added to that jersey for spring training 1976. That’s strictly speculation with no facts to back it up.”

None of this adds up for me. Notice on photo of the armband on the prior page, the armband overlaps the 1976 patch, and this is consistent with other examples we have seen. This means the armband was sewn after the 1976 patch was already present.

The only other thought we have is that the armband was added for the death of former Cubs manager/ scout/coach Lou Klein, who passed June 20, 1976. Or, they could simply be incorrect restorations.

2023-2025 Cubs Advertising Patches

Home, road, and home alternate (powder blue)

Road alternate and City Connect

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Cubs did not make a deal with a jersey patch sponsor in 2023. However, perhaps in a move to accommodate a future ad patch, the team removed the National League logo patch from the right sleeve on its blue alternate jerseys prior to the 2023 season. The Walking Cub patch still remained on the left sleeve of the home and road jerseys in 2023.

In 2024, the Cubs struck a sponsor patch deal with Motorola, a telecommunications company. The patches first appeared on August 1, 2024. There are two versions of the patch. One is a blue circle with a white Motorola logo, used on the home, road, and powder blue jerseys. The other is a white circle with a blue Motorola logo used on the alternate and City Connect jerseys. The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Mark Grace 1988 Cubs (Rookie) Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: November 4. 2020 Certification Number: 21-0201J08

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White pullover Rawlings size 42 jersey with royal blue engineered pinstripes, blue V-neck trim, Chicago Cubs jersey. Issued to Mark Grace in the 1988 season. The Cubs red and blue embroidered twill team disk patch is sewn to the left chest, and the proper for 1988 cartoon frowning cub-face patch is sewn to the left sleeve. Number "17" in red outlined in white, no name on back. The font is correct for the 1988 Cubs, size 42 which is a consistent size for those Grace game jerseys worn only very early in his career. Grace has signed the jersey on the upper left chest. I have no opinion on the autograph, but it comes with a Beckett letter of authenticity certifying the signature.

Grace was called up by the Cubs in May of 1988, and he was assigned #28. He switched to #17 later in the season, and kept that number for the rest of his career. This jersey has always been numbered #17, there has been no number change.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawling manufacturer tag sewn inside the neck is in the proper style for 1988. Team index tagging "17 88 2 42" (which decodes to player number 17, 1988 season, set 2, size 42) is machine-embroidered on a twill strip (not knit, as is correct for 1988) into the collar directly below the Rawlings manufacturer tag. A flag tab is sewn pinched under the right side of the Rawlings tag. "Set 2 1988". Both the sleeve ends and collar are trimmed with 3/4" sewn-in royal blue knit trim. "Rawlings" is embroidered into the right sleeve in white using the company's logo script.

Wear & Repairs: There are no signs of any team repairs, and it is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed, but wear is very light. As a set 2, this may have been his secondary jersey.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use and wash wear. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Mark Grace of the Chicago Cubs during the 1988 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Rick Sutcliffe 1984 Chicago Cubs Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: January 21, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1984-tagged Chicago Cubs, Rawlings-made road blue full-weight knit V-neck pullover jersey. Red and white striped sewn in knit trim at the sleeve and neck openings. Issued to and worn by Rick Sutcliffe. The Cubs team disk patch is sewn to the left chest, and the proper for 1984 cartoon frowning cub-face patch is sewn to the left sleeve. Number "40" in red outlined in white, direct sewn radially arched name on back. All fonts are correct for the 1984 Cubs; during these years, the Cubs interchangeably used both radial and vertically arched player names. It is a size 48, which is a consistent size for Sutcliffe game jerseys in this point of his career. There is no evidence of the 1984 post-season patch having been sewn to the right sleeve. (And images of Sutcliffe pitching in the postseason show him clearly wearing a different jersey than this one.)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson manufacturer tag sewn inside the neck is in that maker's proper style. Team index tagging "84 2 48" (which decodes to 1984 season, set 2, size 48) is embroidered on a knit strip of the same fabric as the jersey, stitched into the back of the neck directly below the Wilson manufacturer tag. A square knit tag sewn on the outside left front tail has the two-digit year, "84" in the same chain stitch handwriting. Both sleeve ends and the collar opening are trimmed with wide sewn-in red and white knit trim.

Wear & Repairs: There are no signs of any team repairs, and it is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times. The back lettering has softened, and the edges are slightly frayed and the white outlining has been laundry-stained so that it is no longer bright white.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits game use and wash wear. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Rick Sutcliffe in the 1984 season.

Andre Dawson 1987 Chicago Cubs Game Worn Blue Road Jersey

Examination Date: January 27, 2021 Certification Number: 21-20201J06

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road Royal-Blue pullover V-neck full-weight Rawlings-made Chicago Cubs jersey, issued to Andre Dawson in the 1987 season. Both sleeve ends and collar are trimmed with wide sewn-in red and white knit trim. The large red, white and blue Cubs team disk patch is sewn to the left chest, and the proper for 1987 cartoon frowning cub-face patch is sewn to the left sleeve. Number "8" in red outlined in white, direct-sewn radially arched "DAWSON" name on back. All fonts are correct for the 1987 Cubs. It is a size 44T (tapered) which is a consistent size for Dawson game jerseys in this point of his career.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawling manufacturer tag sewn inside the neck is in that manufacturer's proper style; 1987 was the final year for the rectangular red embroidered tag. Team index tagging "11 87 1 44T" (which decodes to player number 11, 1987 season, set 1, size 44 tapered) is machine-embroidered on a strip of royal blue tackle twill (as is correct for 1987 Cubs jerseys) , into the collar directly below the Rawlings red size 44 manufacturer tag. "Rawlings" logo script is embroidered into the right sleeve an inch above the sleeve-end trim. 1987 was Dawson's first year with the Cubs, and he was a very late signing, inking his contract on March 6 when the team had already begun spring training. Notably- Dawson wore #8, not #11 as noted in the collar tag. Backup catcher Jim Sundberg, who had also joined the Cubs in the 1987 season, was assigned #11. Dawson and Sundberg were listed at the same weight and approximate size (though Dawson had longer legs), and in my estimation it would be completely reasonable for the Cubs to have designated any jersey already ordered and tailored for Sundberg to be duplicated for use by Dawson, as the opening day uniform orders to Rawlings were likely already in the process of being submitted by the time Dawson arrived on site.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering and stitching on the jersey is unaltered. There are no signs of any team repairs, and it is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed. There is some yellowing of the white twill on the back lettering outlining, and definite minor discoloration of the white sleeve end trim that comes from washing. There is no puckering of the back lettering that occurs after heavy use and washing. The jersey shows light, even use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits appropriate use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and worn by Andre Dawson of the Chicago Cubs in 1987.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Ryne Sandberg 1987 Chicago Cubs Game Worn Blue Road Jersey

Examination Date: January 27, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J07

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road Royal-blue pullover V-neck full-weight Rawlings-made Chicago Cubs jersey, issued to Ryne Sandberg in the 1987 season. Both sleeve ends and collar are trimmed with wide sewn-in red and white knit trim. The large red, white and blue Cubs team disk patch is sewn to the left chest, and the proper for 1987 cartoon frowning cub-face patch is sewn to the left sleeve. Number "23" in red outlined in white, direct-sewn radially arched "SANDBERG" name on back. All fonts are correct for the 1987 Cubs. It is a size 42T (tapered) which is a consistent size for Sandberg game jerseys in 1987.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawling manufacturer tag sewn inside the neck is in the (three line wash instructions) style used 1972-1984, but it is not generally seen after 1984, and does not appear on any other Cubs 1987 jerseys in my exemplar collection. It is odd, but not impossible that an obsolete tag would appear here. Team index tagging "23 87 1 42T" (which decodes to player number 23, 1987 season, set 1, size 42 tapered) is machine-embroidered on a strip of royal blue tackle twill (as is correct for 1987 Cubs jerseys), into the collar directly below the Rawlings red size 44 manufacturer tag. (I will note that there are two different machine-fonts used on Cubs' 1987 tagging, this matches one of them) "Rawlings" logo script is embroidered into the right sleeve an inch above the sleeve-end trim.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering and stitching on the jersey is unaltered. There are no signs of any team repairs, and it is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times. There is some yellowing of the white twill on the back lettering outlining, and graying of the white sleeve end trim that comes from washing. There is notable puckering and burnishing of the back lettering that occurs after heavy use and washing. The sheen of the lettering is definitely diminished. The jersey shows moderate, even use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. Aside from the odd use of the older collar Rawlings tag, it is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits appropriate use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and worn by Ryne Sandberg of the Chicago Cubs in 1987.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Ryne Sandberg 1996 Chicago Cubs Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: November 4. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1104J08

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White with blue pinstripes, home full-weight six button Chicago Cubs jersey, Ryne Sandberg #23. On the back, "SANDBERG" radially arched with his number "23" below, in Royal Blue outlined in red. in the proper fonts and twill colors for the 1996 Cubs, It is a size 46, which is a reasonable size for Sandberg game jerseys at this point of his career. The Cubs team disk-patch is sewn to the left chest, and the 1996 cartoon frowning cub style patch is sewn to the left sleeve. A velcro closure is added between the second and third buttons. The jersey is autographed on the back between the name and numbers with the inscription 9/14/96. (I have no opinion on the autograph.) A box score of that date shows the Cubs played the Phillies in Chicago, the Phillies won 6-2, Sandberg hit a one-run home run run the 7th inning, going 1-4 for the game. Because I have seen another Cubs jerseys autographed in the same way, including the added date 9/14/1996, we might conclude that this was an organized uniform auction or give-away event.

While we did not locate any photos of this game, a photo of Sandberg dated on the day prior shows him wearing a jersey that has possibly identical alignment of the sleeve patch and Cubs crest when compared to the jersey in hand. It also appears to have extra-length sleeves. This is not enough evidence for a photo match (Getty Images #450113608) but it is worthy of consideration.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Team collar tagging "46-96-2" (which indicates size 46, 1996 season, set 2,) is printed onto a piece of white mylar fabric and is then sewn into the collar. From our exemplar library, This tag style is the most commonly used in 1996. A few players had their uniform number on the team tag, but most did not. Russell Diamond Collection manufacturer tag is sewn on the outside front left tail of the jersey, with a "100% Polyester" flag tag centered below, then two more layered flags: 1" extra length and 1" extra sleeve length. (Note: The Russell tail tag is of the style generally seen 1992-1994, with the "flat" slope-angled DIAMOND word. It is unusual but not impossible for it to be found on a 1996 jersey.) Russell blue and red "R" logo is embroidered into the right sleeve end.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation shows that the lettering on this jersey is original and without alteration. The jersey has very little wear, as all elements are still crisp including the back and flag tags. However, it appears to be in as-worn, unwashed condition, with ground in dirt stains on the right sleeve, the right shoulder, and under the right arm, as well as on the back lower right side.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits the signs of wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my the considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and issued to and worn by Ryne Sandberg of the Chicago Cubs in the 1996 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Sammy Sosa 1996 Chicago Cubs Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: November 4. 2020 Certification Number: 20-1104J09

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Diamond Collection tagging appropriate for 1996 is sewn to the outside left tail. Pinched beneath the tag is a small 100% Polyester flag tag, and correspondingly there is no flag size tag in the neck. These are the hallmarks of Russell team-spec (as opposed to retail sale) jerseys, However, there is no team tagging inside the back of the neck that would normally appear there. Cubs player-issued game jerseys in 1996 had a rectangular mylar-fabric tag inside the back of the neck with the code, uniform size-two digit year-set number (as in "46 96 01,"). Notably: We have evaluated another Cubs jerseys with an autograph on the back and the same date signed below. From this, we suspect a signing event, a fundraiser jersey auction, such as a "shirts off their backs" promotion may have happened on that day, which was a Saturday day game. Given that the jersey shows no signs of wear, it is entirely possible that Sosa offered an unworn, untagged jersey for the signing event, preferring to keep his tailored jersey to wear again.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows no discernible signs of wash/wear. A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alterations.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent unused condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. While it lacks team tagging, given the inscription on back, It is my considered opinion that this jersey was team issued for Sammy Sosa of the 1996 Chicago Cubs.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Greg Maddux 2004 Chicago Cubs Home Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: June 30, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0630J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Maddux started his career with the Cubs in 1986, then was traded to the Braves in 1993. He won four consecutive (1992, 1993, 1994, 1995) Cy Young Awards, and was the first pitcher in Major League history to ever win four in a row. He returned to the Cubs for the 2004 season to much fanfare, and stayed for three seasons before moving to finish his career illustrious 22-year Hall of Fame career with the Dodgers and Padres.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Majestic "M" logo is direct embroidered on the end of the left sleeve in Royal Blue. Majestic Authentic Collection locker tag appropriate for 2004 is sewn to the outside left tail. Pinched beneath the tag is a small size 48 flag tag. Pinched inside the side seam is the Majestic style code tag, with the designation "0062" signifying that this is a jersey model made to team specifications rather than for retail sale. Inside the back of the neck is a 1"x 3" double knit tag with serged edge, with direct machine-stitched embroidery: "04 48 S2" (2004, size 48 set 2), Comparing this tagging to exemplars in our archives, I will note that the common nomenclature for 2004 Cubs tagging is a set of 4 pairs of numbers, the first set being the player's number. (Following that example, this jersey would more commonly have been tagged "31 04 49 S2") The only other example we have of a jersey so tagged is another Maddux jersey, that one a 2004 road jersey.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alterations. The jersey shows more than moderate wear, with burnishing of the twill numbers, wash puckering of the sewn elements and a slight but notable overall graying of the fabric from its original bright white. There are tiny fabric pulls scattered across the the jersey's surface. It is clear that this jersey has been worn and washed many times.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good used condition, is properly lettered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. While its tagging differs slightly from other 2004 Cubs player examples, it is clearly a team prepared and issued jersey and shows strong use. It is the correct size for Maddux to have worn. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was team prepared and used by Greg Maddux of the 2004 Chicago Cubs.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Greg Maddux 2004 Chicago Cubs Road Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: August 3, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0803J01R

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Majestic six-button solid gray full-weight double knit Chicago Cubs size 46 road jersey of #31, Greg Maddux. Maddux wore both size 46 and 48 jerseys at this point in his career. Blue over white CHICAGO arched in the team font across both panels of the chest, player number "31" in red over white in the Cubs signature font on both the left front and back with MADDUX radially arched above, both in Royal Blue outlined with white. Red white and blue walking cub patch on the left sleeve. The red/white/blue MLB silhouetted batter logo is on an embroidered patch sewn to the center of the back of the neck, correct for 2004. Maddux has signed the back "3" in black ink, I have no opinion on the authenticity of the autograph.

Maddux started his career with the Cubs in 1986, then was traded to the Braves in 1993. He won four consecutive (1992, 1993, 1994, 1995) Cy Young Awards, and was the first pitcher in Major League history to ever win four in a row. He returned to the Cubs for the 2004 season to much fanfare, and stayed for three seasons before moving to finish his career illustrious 22-year Hall of Fame career with the Dodgers and Padres. In August 2004 Maddux registered his 300th career win wearing a road jersey identical in appearance to this one.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Majestic "M" logo is direct embroidered on the end of the left sleeve in Royal Blue. Majestic Authentic Collection locker tag appropriate for 2004 is sewn to the outside left tail. Pinched beneath the tag is a small size 46 flag tag. Pinched inside the side seam is the Majestic style code tag, with the designation "0062" signifying that this is a jersey model made to team specifications rather than for retail sale. Inside the back of the neck is a 1"x 3" double knit tag with serged edge, with direct machine-stitched embroidery: "31 47 04" (Player 31, size 46, 2004), Comparing this tagging to exemplars in our archives, I will note that it does not follow the common nomenclature for 2004 Cubs tagging, which is a set of 4 pairs of numbers, the first set being the player's number. (Following that example, this jersey would more commonly have been tagged "31 04 46 S2") The only other examples we have of a jersey so tagged are two other 2004 Maddux jerseys. It is entirely possible the team or the player ordered extra jerseys that year that were made separately from the team's regular sets.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alterations. The jersey shows very light wear, without discernible wear to the fabric and lettering, but mild wash-wear evident on the tagging.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent lightly worn condition, is properly lettered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. While its tagging differs slightly from other 2004 Cubs player examples, it is clearly a team prepared and issued jersey. It is the correct size for Maddux to have worn. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was team prepared and used by Greg Maddux of the 2004 Chicago Cubs.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Todd Van Poppel 2000 Chicago Cubs Road Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: July 16, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0716J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Majestic six-button solid gray full-weight double knit Chicago Cubs size 52 road jersey of #47, pitcher Todd Van Poppel. The size is consistent with other jerseys worn by the player in his career. Blue over white CHICAGO arched in the team font across both panels of the chest, player number "47" in red over white in the correct Cubs font on both the left front and back with VAN POPPEL radially arched above, Royal Blue outlined with white. Red, white and blue walking cub patch on the left sleeve. The red/white/blue MLB silhouetted batter logo is on an embroidered patch sewn to the center of the back of the neck, correct for 2000.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Majestic "M" logo is not direct embroidered on the end of the left sleeve as is usually seen, instead it is sewn-on as a small embroidered patch that is stitched to the jersey sleeve, but this matches many other 2000 Cubs jerseys. (2000 was the first year for Majestic to make Cubs jerseys, assuming the contract from Russell, and there are a few oddities like these seen on 2000 season Cubs jerseys in our exemplar library.) Majestic Authentic Collection locker tag appropriate for 2000 is sewn to the outside left tail. Pinched beneath the tag is a small size 52 flag tag. Pinched inside the side seam is a Majestic wash instruction tag, but unlike other Majestic tag I can recall seeing. It does not have a jersey style designation number of any kind printed on it. Inside the back of the neck is a 1"x 3" gray double knit tag, with direct machine-stitched embroidery: "52 00 1" (Size 52, 2000, set 1), and stitched directly to its left is a separate smaller tag with a very slightly different machine embroidered number 47 on it. This tagging was all stitched in the back of the neck before the placket was stitched closed, as is correct.

One interesting characteristic of this jersey is that all of the lettering is double-color stitched, that is: both colors have been stitched through to the shirt. This is not common on jerseys that were made at the factory for the beginning of the season. But research shows that Van Poppel was a May 12, 2000 call-up from the Iowa Cubs. This can explain the different stitching on the player lettering, and also the unique configuration of the team tagging in the back of the neck; this jersey was very likely made after the start of the season and was not part of the initial set of jerseys made for the club out of spring training by Majestic. And while I have never seen this style of the inside seam wash instruction tag before, the jersey seems wholly authentic and I would simply list this as an example of a unique item that has not crossed my path before.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alterations. The jersey shows normal wear for a season of use without repairs.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Above left, a characteristic of many 2000 season Cubs jersey is the Majestic logo stitched on a patch to the sleeve versus direct embroidered. Above right notice the team tagging in the back of the collar which has a separate sewn element for the player number, 47, at its left. This indicates to me that this jersey was an extra at the beginning of the season that was customized for the player after the season began. Notice the detail of stitching of the player name which shows both colors stitched through to the shirt, another characteristic of jerseys stitched separately from the team's initial order from spring training. At right the inside wash instructions tag which is unlike Majestic's usual tagging.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good game worn condition, is properly lettered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. While its tagging differs slightly from other 2000 Cubs player examples, it is clearly a team prepared and issued jersey. It is the correct size for Van Poppel to have worn. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was team prepared and used by Todd Van Poppel of the 2000 Chicago Cubs.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Dave Guisti 1977 Chicago Cubs Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: August 23, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0823J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1977-tagged Chicago Cubs, Wilson-made home pinstripe full-weight knit V-neck pullover jersey. Royal blue sewn in knit trim at the sleeve and V-neck openings. Royal Blue numbers on the back. The Cubs team disk patch is sewn to the left chest, and the correct-for-1977 cub-face patch is sewn to the left sleeve. Wilson tag in the back of the neck lists the size as 46. Team index tagging "44 77 1 46" (which decodes to Player 44, 1977 season, set 1, size 46) is embroidered in the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher on a white knit strip of fabric stitched into the back of the neck directly below the Wilson manufacturer tag. A square knit tag sewn on the outside left front tail has the two-digit year, "77" in the same chain stitch handwriting.

Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey wore #35 on the back; the light table revealed multiple number changes. Collar tagging indicated the original number had been 44; and removal of the numbers 35 and placement on the light table on back revealed that besides having originally been #44, it had also likely been worn as #46. The Cubs were a frugal organization that typically reissued jerseys in both spring training and in the minor leagues after their MLB service was through. Of the Cubs' five minor league affiliates in 1978, four were named "Cubs".

Pitcher Dave Guisti was issued #44 in 1977, and at 5' 11" and 195 lbs he would have fit well in this size 46 jersey. 1977 was the final season of his 15-year MLB career, and he spent the full season with the Cubs as a middle reliever, pitching 85.2 innings and compiling a 3-5 record with a 3.91 ERA.

After removing the numbers 35, I cleaned the glue from the other number changes the best I could. I cut new numbers 44 that both matched the team patterns and the ghosts on the jersey, then media blasted and dyed them to age them appropriately to match the rest of the jersey. I stitched them in place directly over the original ghosts. Slight outlines of the other number changes are still visible on close inspection.

Above: jersey as received; at right the ghosts of the numbers that had been on this jersey in its past include the original 44, 25 and possibly also 46.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition: the front is all original, and the back is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Dave Guisti of the 1977 Chicago Cubs, in the final year of his MLB career.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Sammy Sosa 2004 Chicago Cubs Alternate Blue Game Jersey

Examination Date: June 16, 2025 Certification Number: 25-0616J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Majestic six-button Royal Blue full-weight double-knit Chicago Cubs size 48 road jersey of #21, Sammy Sosa. The size is consistent with other jerseys worn by the player late in his career. Large red white and blue embroidered walking Cub patch stitched to the left chest, player number "21" in red over white in the correct Cubs font at 8 ¼" on back, with SOSA radially arched above in the same colors. Oddly- the embroidered 14-star National League patch on the right sleeve, is the version that was used only in 1997. In 2004 the standard issue patch had 16 stars on it, and looking a dozens of media photos, the team was wearing the correct patch. However, in a single photo of Sosa I found, dated August 12, 2004 (Getty #51164099), his jersey has the old 14-star patch. Sosa's captain "C" in the correct font and also in red over white is stitched to the left sleeve. The red/white/blue MLB silhouetted batter logo is on an embroidered patch sewn to the center of the back of the neck, correct for 2004. The sleeve ends are tailored with elastic ends, a feature Sosa preferred in the later years of his career.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Majestic "M" logo is direct embroidered on the end of the left sleeve; Majestic Authentic Collection locker tag appropriate for 2004 is sewn to the outside left tail. Pinched beneath the tag is a small size 48 flag tag. Pinch-sewn inside the side seam is a Majestic wash instruction tag with the code number 0062 on it, the proper designation for a team-issued style jersey vs. "6200" an Authentic made to be sold at retail. Stitched into the back, inside of the collar is a machine-embroidered blue jersey fabric tag, "21 48 04" (player 21, size 48, 2004) sewn there before the placket was stitched closed, as is correct. The tagging as well as all other specifics matches exemplars for other Sosa game jerseys from 2004. This jersey was presented without provenance. I will add that someone, perhaps an owner of the jersey, has affixed a piece heavy gray vinyl tape inside the back of the jersey and has written on it in blue ink "Cubs at Brewers 7-26 2004 Cubs 3 Brewers 1". This is not a recognized team tagging addition.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation of the garment shows that the lettering is all original and without alterations. The jersey shows perhaps very light use. 2004 was Sosa's final season with the Cubs and as a fan favorite, his game jerseys were high demand. While the MLB Authentication Program had been in place for several years at that point, very few team jerseys were tagged/hologrammed in 2004 unless they were part of a significant event like the World Series or a notable record-breaking game of some kind. From my experience, and from the number of period-claimed game used Sosa Cubs jerseys that are offered for sale in the hobby, it is likely that he was wearing a jersey only briefly at this point before it was circulated into the collector market.

Conclusion: While this jersey was offered without provenance and shows minimal wear, it is properly lettered, player-sized and team tagged and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was team prepared for use by Sammy Sosa of the 2000 Chicago Cubs.

Chapter 17

Arizona Diamondbacks

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Diamondbacks Uniform History Notes

- For a team in existence just 27 years at this writing, the Diamondbacks have had more different uniforms than most teams that have been around for decades longer.
- In their inaugural 1998 season, they first take the field in home uniforms that featured purple pinstripes and wordmarks in purple, turquoise, metallic copper, and black. These designs distinctly capture the 1990s era through their bold colors and style.
- Road uniforms are gray, also with purple pinstripes. “Arizona” wordmark is in fussy, four-color twill including a drop shadow. Three different alternate jerseys are featured in the opening year set, including a white pinstriped vest, a black jersey, and a purple-bodied jersey as well.
- Fiddling begins almost immediately. The player numbers on the purple alternate jersey are deemed too difficult to read, so the colors of the twill are switched around for 1999.
- The home, road, and black alternate jerseys all received new designs in 2001.
- The purple jersey was retired after the 2002 season, though the rest of the lineup remained unchanged until 2006.
- In 2007, the team revamped its colors and overall look, adopting Sedona red, black, and sonoran sand as primary colors. Some, but not all, team wordmarks were updated.
- Full name of Diamondbacks is replaced on all team apparel with the nickname D-backs. The only remaining original elements were the alternate “A” wordmark and the coiled snake “D” logo, though all colors and trim were updated.
- Note that while they changed their colors, the team kept two of their primary logos, so that the team would not have to register new trademarks.
- After a nine-season run from 2007–2015, the Diamondbacks again overhauled their identity for 2016. They kept a single jersey concept based on the earlier black alternate, thought modified it with sublimated patterned fabric on the sides.
- The new uniforms for 2016 are like nothing else seen before in MLB. The Flex Base uniforms have shaded graphics patterns sublimated into the fabric, on shoulders, sides, and back. There are a choice of six game jerseys blending all sorts of unusual color combinations of maroon, tan, gray, turquoise, and black. Road jerseys are mostly a very dark charcoal gray, again with patterns of black sublimated into the jersey back or side panels. The player number font changed to a somewhat severe, angular design, replacing the curved fonts of prior years. Fan reaction is mixed. These jerseys would be rather difficult for counterfeiters to reproduce, and at least through 2019, MLB even forbid the sale of the team’s special colored twills to anyone other than Majestic. Slowing the counterfeiters may have been a side motivation for the complex designs.
- After four years, the team simplifies its busy 2016 set for the 2020 season, retaining colors and fonts, but ditching printed patterns, odd shades of gray fabric, and truncated striping. There are now (only) five different jerseys in regular rotation, down from six, but that doesn’t include a new “Los D-Backs” jersey that is introduced with the new set that is, technically, a special event jersey.
- City Connect uniforms debut in 2021 featuring a sand-colored base inspired by Arizona’s desert landscape. “Serpientes” was scripted across the chest in tribute to the region’s Hispanic community, with black numbers, player names, and a custom front number font. The right sleeve includes a stylized Arizona state flag, while the left sleeve bears a black-and-sand version of the team’s “A” logo. Initially worn with white pants, the jersey switched to matching sand-colored pants in 2022.
- For 2024, the Diamondbacks debut a full new uniform set with the arrival of the Nike VPE template, replacing their previous designs and dropping sand as a primary color. The updated set includes cream home jerseys, gray road jerseys, and red and black alternates—all unified by red/black/teal color schemes and consistent typography. The cream home jersey features the team’s “A” logo on the left chest, while the road jersey revives the full “Arizona” wordmark in arched block lettering. The red alternate displays a vertically arched “Diamondbacks” wordmark, and the black alternate mirrors the home layout with the “A” logo on the chest.
- A City Connect 2.0 jersey is rolled out in 2025, replacing the original version with a bolder, more vibrant design. The new look features a deep purple base with teal accents, a nod to the team’s 1998–2006 origins, and the return of “Serpientes” in a stylized turquoise script, now with a visible snake head detail on the “S”. Sleeve trim evokes snakeskin while subtle tonal pinstripes add texture to the fabric.

* In its last year, the purple jersey was worn frequently in 2002 Spring Training, then seldom after the start of the season.
 Although I have seen an "authenticated" 2001 Russell jersey, I can't say for sure if it is real, and it is the only tagged example I have seen. More research required. (x) For 1999 and later colors of numbers front and back change. 1998's numbers have turquoise as their main color. 1999-2002 use metallic gold.

1998-2000 Home

Steve Kraljic Collection

The fabric color for this pinstriped jersey is defined as "off white," though it is not as yellow-tinted as those described as "cream colored" (like the Giants). The Diamondbacks' original primary wordmark is slanted across the front, with purple pinstripes.

Two-color name on back: turquoise/purple. No nameplates used.

Russell makes the 1998–1999 uniforms; Rawlings makes the 2000 version.

The purple alternate jersey is used as the team's home Spring Training jersey 1998–2002.

Player lettering and NOB colors—1998 only

Very close inspection reveals that some early 1998 purple jerseys had turquoise and purple trim (bottom) instead of standard turquoise and black trim (top)

2002 player number and NOB lettering representative of 1999–2002

1998 only has the Diamondbacks Inaugural patch on the left sleeve. 1999–2002 has the standard team patch. See the page for the home jersey several pages back for team patch photos.

- In their first year, the Diamondbacks include a purple alternate jersey and wear it frequently.
- The jersey features fancy turquoise/metallic copper/black trim on the sleeve ends.
- "Arizona" lettering on the front is rendered in turquoise/white/metallic copper/black 3D drop shadow.
- The 1998 Inaugural Year patch is sewn to the left sleeve.
- For 1998 only: front numbers appear in a custom Diamondbacks font, turquoise outlined in metallic copper.
- Back numbers are three-color in Diamondbacks font: turquoise/metallic copper/white.
- Names on back are also in Diamondbacks font, two-color turquoise/white. No nameplates.
- These lettering colors proved difficult to read from a distance, and all player name and number colors were changed for the 1999 season.
- For 1999–2002: front numbers are metallic copper/white.
- Back numbers are three-color in Diamondbacks font: metallic copper/turquoise/white.
- Names on back are two-color: metallic copper/white.

2007-2015 Home

- For 2007, the Diamondbacks completely redesign their uniforms, even changing their colors.
- The team drops the purple and metallic copper that had been its mainstays, deeming them "too 90s."
- New colors are very similar to those introduced in the Astros' 2000 redesign.
- The team nickname "D-backs" replaces any use of the full team name.
- Jersey trim is very simple and restrained, with thin black and red knit trim on the sleeve ends only.
- A clever new "DB" sleeve patch, designed to graphically represent a snake head, adorns the left sleeve.
- Sleeve patch design changes slightly in 2008 (see "Oddballs" section later in this chapter).
- Player names appear on the back; numbers are on the back only. No nameplates are used.
- Names are red/black; numbers are black/red. Both use the custom Diamondbacks font, which resembles Block Standard at a glance.

2007-2015 Road

- The standard road jersey is much more traditional and restrained compared to the previous design.
- Purple pinstripes are removed. A new three-color “Arizona” wordmark appears on the front.
- The “DB” patch is used on the left sleeve in 2007.
- Sleeve patch design changes slightly in 2008 (see “Oddballs” section later in this chapter).
- Player names appear on the back; numbers are on the back only.
- Names are red/black; numbers are black/red. Both use the custom Diamondbacks font.
- No nameplates are used.

2007-2015 Alternate Red

2007 only patch

2008-2015 patch

- The alternate jersey is a deep red, chosen to reflect a Southwest theme. It is very similar in color to the Astros' "Brick" red alternate jerseys.
- Simple black/tan/black knit trim appears on the sleeve ends only.
- The snake head "DB" patch is sewn to the left sleeve.
- Player names and numbers appear on the back only.
- In 2007 only: numbers are sand/black; names are black/sand. From 2008–2015: numbers are black/sand; names are sand/black.
- Both name and number fonts are custom to the Diamondbacks; no nameplates are used.
- Sleeve patch design changes slightly in 2008 (see "Oddballs" section later in this chapter).

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

2016-2019 Home

The Diamondbacks' 2016 redesign is a radical departure from traditional baseball looks, taking full advantage of the Flex Base template's multiple panels and materials. The primary home jersey features a white base with sublimated diamond-pattern gradient designs that fade from red to white on the shoulders and side panels.

Team name and back numbers are black/red/sand. Player name and front numbers are red/black. All elements are rendered in the team's custom font. Red/black/red braid appears on the outer half of the sleeve ends, but does not continue underneath the sleeve.

2016

The primary road jersey uses a dark charcoal gray base—noticeably darker than that of other teams—and features sublimated diamond-pattern gradient designs fading from black to gray on the shoulders and side panels.

In 2016, team name and back numbers are black/red/sand. Player name and front numbers are red/black, all rendered in the team's custom font.

Starting in 2017, the player name and front number colors are changed to sand/red to improve legibility.

Black/red/black braid appears on the outer half of the sleeve ends, but does not continue under the sleeve.

2020-2022 Home

The Diamondbacks have shifted between bold and traditional uniform designs over the years. The 2020 home jersey represents a “market correction” back toward baseball tradition, eliminating the patterns and gradients of the prior set.

This version uses Nike’s adaptation of the Majestic Flex Base template. It features a solid white base with black/red/sand front wordmark and back numbers. Front numbers and player names are red/black, all rendered in the same custom font introduced in 2016.

Red/black/red trim encircles the neck opening and runs just above the sleeve ends—now wrapping fully around the sleeve, unlike in the previous set. The red/white version of the “Snake with Ball” patch appears on the left sleeve.

The style is discontinued after the 2022 season.

2020-2023 Road

The simplification of the Diamondbacks' uniforms carries over to their primary road jersey—eliminating the bold patterns and gradients of the previous set. Now using Nike's adaptation of the Majestic Flex Base template, the road jersey returns to a traditional solid light gray base, replacing the darker charcoal-gray of the prior version.

Front wordmark and back numbers: black/red/sand. Front numbers and player names: black/red. All lettering continues in the custom Diamondbacks font used since 2016.

Red/black/red trim encircles the neck opening and appears just above the sleeve ends, now wrapping fully around the sleeves (unlike in the prior set).

2020-2022 Alternate Home/2023 Home

Despite the jerseys themselves becoming more traditional, especially in the removal of the patterns and gradients from the last set, the D-Backs still maintain their own tradition of a multitude of on-field options, including this second home jersey. Now on Nike's version of Majestic's Flex Base template, the alternate home jersey becomes much simpler with a solid white base, black/red/teal front wordmark and back numbers, and teal/black front numbers and player names, all continuing with the same custom font from the 2016–2019 sets. Teal/black/teal trim encircles the neck opening and appears just above the sleeve ends (going all the way around the sleeve now, contrary to the last set). The red/teal version of the "Snake with Ball" patch returns here, on the left sleeve. In 2023, the team elevates this style to its home jersey, after eliminating the version with the red/black numbers.

2020-2022 Alternate Red/2023 Alternate Road Red

Steve Kraljic Collection

The D-Backs have had a red alternate for more than a decade, and this 2020–2023 entry continues that tradition, while stripping away the unusual patterns and gradients of their previous jerseys. Now on Nike's version of Majestic's Flex Base template, this simplified alternate has black/sand wordmark and front and back numbers, and sand/black player names, all continuing with the same custom font from the 2016–2019 sets. Sand/black/sand trim encircles the neck opening and appears just above the sleeve ends (going all the way around the sleeve now, contrary to the last set). The red/white version of the "Snake with Ball" patch returns here, on the left sleeve. Unlike other years, in 2023 only, the jersey is exclusively a road alternate.

2020 Alternate Black/2021-2023 Alternate Home Black

No matter their color scheme, the D-Backs have always maintained a black alternate jersey, and the 2020–2023 period is no exception, though this incarnation is simpler, removing the patterns and gradients of their previous jerseys. Now on Nike's version of Majestic's Flex Base template, this black alternate has a red/black/sand version of their "A" cap logo on front with no front numbers. Red/sand numbers and sand/red names appear on back, all continuing with the same custom font from the 2016–2019 sets. Sand/red/sand trim encircles the neck opening and appears just above the sleeve ends (going all the way around the sleeve now, contrary to the last set). The red/white version of the "Snake with Ball" patch returns here, on the left sleeve.

Steve Kraljic Collection

The Diamondbacks' entry into City Connect leans heavily on the Arizona motif (vs. a single city, as the promotion name would suggest). According to the team, "These jersey colors bring forward the Sonoran desert sand from the D-backs' brand and have 'Serpientes' winding across the chest. Serpientes, the Spanish translation of Snakes, was used to pay tribute to the Hispanic Culture so prominent in Arizona." As this description indicates, these Nike Flex Base jerseys are a sandy color (similar to what the Padres once wore) with black/sand "Serpientes" script on front and player numbers on back. Front numbers and player name are in the team's custom font in red/sand. The left sleeve has a black/sand version of the team's "A" logo, while the right has a recolored version of the Arizona state flag. Starting in 2023, the Arizona flag is replaced by a sponsor patch, and the location of both the sponsor and "A" patches vary based on the handedness of each player. Above the jock tag, a V-shaped snake surrounds a stylized red circle, all of which represents Phoenix's nickname of "The Valley of the Sun." In their first year, they were paired with regular team pants, but in 2022, they return to the field with matching sand-color pants.

We have seen examples of this jersey bearing two different style codes - DKC2 (right, top) and 03VM (right, bottom). We believe DKC2 was used in 2021–2022, while 03VM was used in 2023. This is based on the different shapes of the tags, which Nike quietly changed for the 2023 season. See the Manufacturer Tagging chapter for more info.

Nike Flex Base 2020-2023

Note that the Diamondbacks changed all of their uniforms before the 2024 season, so both the styles and template differ between these sets of photos.

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

2024 Home

The advent of the Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template for 2024 coincides with a new set of uniforms for the Diamondbacks, bringing back teal and abandoning sand as a primary color. The Diamondbacks' 2024 home jersey is on a cream-color base, returning to a style they last used in 2006. The front-left chest sports a red/black/teal "A" logo, with black knit trim around the neck and placket, and cream/black trim on the sleeve ends. Player name is on back in black/teal, while player numbers are red/black/teal. Back numbers are perforated. A red/teal version of the "Snake with Ball" patch appears on one sleeve, while the team's sponsor patch resides on the other.

The advent of the Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template for 2024 coincides with a new set of uniforms for the Diamondbacks, bringing back teal and abandoning sand as a primary color. The 2024 black alternate jersey takes its cues from the home jersey, with a different color scheme. 2024 City Connect

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Diamondbacks; sand-colored City Connect jersey (even though sand was de-emphasized as a team color in 2024). All of the storytelling elements outlined on the 2021-2023 version return, minus the original state flag patch, which was replaced in 2023 by a sponsor patch. Back names and numbers are smaller, as is expected, and numbers are also perforated. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but the "Serpientes" lettering breaks across the placket at the same place as it did before - a rarity on most VPE jerseys.

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. VPE’s placket remains narrow, so the “Arizona” lettering breaks in the same place as in 2024. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

2025 City Connect 2.0

The Diamondbacks introduce a City Connect 2.0 in 2025, which takes elements of its CC 1.0 and applies some throwback touches according to the team's press release, selections of which follow:

"Arizona Born" Collar Graphic: The only major sports team born with Arizona in its name, this motto pays homage to a legacy rooted in the desert and built for the entire state.

"Flag" Patch: The flag patch unites the team and its state, a symbol of its unwavering connection.

"Established" Jock Tag: The mark celebrates the establishment of the team (1998) and Arizona (48th State)

Jersey Details: The jersey pays tribute to the team's history, blending elements of the original pinstripes with a snakeskin pattern.

Sleeve Trim: The sleeve features a modern interpretation of the distinctive braiding from the team's classic alternate uniforms.

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1998 Batting Practice/Spring Training only

This mesh jersey has two buttons at the neck; Diamondbacks wordmark has purple as the top color in the word "DIAMOND," turquoise used for "BACKS." There are no sleeve patches.

Three-color number, turquoise/white/purple (the purple is difficult to see). We have no photos of these jerseys with NOB and suspect that they may have only been used during 1998 Spring Training, before the team played its first official game.

Note that Travis Lee studio-portrait card (bottom left) shows him wearing a retail-sale model of the jersey, identifiable by its decal sleeve logo—unlike the embroidered version typically found on team-issued models. No team-issued jerseys of this style have been found with an embroidered sleeve logo or player NOB.

This button-front black mesh jersey, featuring plain sleeve ends, was also worn during 1998 Spring Training road games. An inaugural season patch appears on the left sleeve.

Team-issued jerseys feature an embroidered Majestic logo on the sleeve; retail models have a heat-pressed decal instead. Back numbers are three-color: turquoise/white/purple. Names on back are two-color: purple/white.

Rawlings-made versions of these jerseys—often seen with visible Rawlings sleeve logos—are minor league issues.

1999 Batting Practice/Spring Training

The jersey design changes from a 2-button Henley pullover to a full button-front style. A very minor change is made to the front lettering from the 1998 style—both “DIAMOND” and “BACKS” are now purple, used only in 1999.

Also worn during 1999 Spring Training road games.

Back lettering remains the same as in 1998. Numbers are three-color: turquoise/white/purple (with the purple difficult to see). Names on back are two-color: purple/white. A team patch is worn on the left sleeve.

2000 Batting Practice

A minor change is again made to the team logo lettering on the front, applied in 1999. “DIAMOND” is sewn in turquoise, and “BACKS” is sewn in purple.

The back remains unchanged, with a three-color number: turquoise/white/purple (the purple is hard to see), and a two-color name: purple/white. The MLB Silhouetted Batter logo is added to the back neck of all MLB jerseys in 2000. A team patch is sewn on the left sleeve.

2003-2006 Batting Practice

Although the jersey appears the same, it is now made from a new, softer, moisture-wicking "tech" fabric. It is non-mesh and features a button front. A team patch appears on the left sleeve, and a black and turquoise silhouetted batter logo is added to the back of the neck.

Back lettering remains the same as before. Back numbers are three-color: turquoise/white/purple. Names on back are two-color: purple/white.

MLB's introduction of new batting practice jerseys in 2007 coincides with the Diamondbacks' uniform redesign. The D-backs' new BP jerseys feature the stylized coiled-snake "D" logo, previously used on BP jerseys since 2001, but now rendered in new team colors.

The jerseys feature a one-button neck and are deep red, with contrasting black and light tan split side panels. All lettering is heat-applied.

In 2007, custom D-backs back numbers are two-color: sand outlined in black. Player names on back are black outlined in sand. All lettering uses the team's custom font.

For 2008, black numbers are now outlined in sand, while sand-colored names are outlined in black. With updated team colors, solid jersey construction, matching side trim combinations, and similar number fonts, the new Diamondbacks look remarkably similar to the Astros!

2011-2013 Batting Practice

In 2011, MLB changes all teams' batting practice jerseys to a button-front format. The Diamondbacks' version remains nearly identical to previous years', except the side panels are now solid black instead of two-toned black and tan.

Player names and numbers on the back are once again made of multi-layered twill. Names are sand with black outlines, while numbers are black with sand outlines.

2014-2015 Batting Practice

All MLB teams received redesigned batting practice jerseys for 2014, and the Diamondbacks' version was altered to closely resemble their red alternate game jersey. Red and black knit trim bands are sewn to the neck opening and sleeve ends. Under-sleeve and side panels are black.

Player name and number on the back are sewn twill and match those of the red game jersey. Names are tan outlined in black; numbers are black outlined in tan. The jock tag is changed to a vertical rectangle featuring the team's secondary "A" logo in the center.

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team.

The Diamondbacks use their regular season red alternate as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The back numbers are black patterned twill/red/tan. The name on back is black patterned twill/tan. Front numbers are the standard black/tan. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "AZ" representing where the Diamondbacks spend Spring Training.

2016 Batting Practice

The D-backs update their batting practice jerseys at the same time as their other uniforms. For as radical as the new uniforms are, the BPs are still built on the same template as the 2014-2015 BP jersey. Knit red and black trim bands are sewn to the neck opening and sleeve ends. Under-sleeve and side panels are black. Redesigned "D-BACKS" wordmark and back numbers are black/red/sand, player name is black/sand, all in the custom team font, identical to the new red game jersey.

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before.

The Diamondbacks again use their regular season red alternate as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. Front numbers are the standard black/tan, as is used in the regular season. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “AZ” representing the Diamondbacks’ spring training home.

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Diamondbacks jersey is black with Sedona red back and underarm gussets. The snake with ball logo, normally a sleeve patch on their standard uniforms, appears here on the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank, and the Diamondbacks also do not wear the player number on the left sleeve as several other teams do.

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general theme of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts, but this year simplified using only one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns.

The Diamondbacks again use their regular-season red alternate as their base. The name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. Front numbers are the standard black/tan, as is used in the regular season. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "AZ" representing their Spring Training home.

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns.

The Diamondbacks again use their regular-season red alternate as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "ARZ," referencing their Spring Training home. Player name and front numbers are black/tan. Back numbers are black/red/tan.

Patch used 2022 only

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates.

For 2020–2023, the Diamondbacks use their new regular-season red alternate as a base, with black/tan front and back numbers. The name on back is tan/black. The 2022 version has a black, circular "RH" memorial patch for baseball-lifer and former Diamondbacks' staff member Roland Hemond. The 2023 version adds a square ad patch.

Special Events Jerseys

1999 Turn Ahead the Clock

Bill Henderson Collection

- 1999 Turn Ahead the Clock promotion. Worn twice: August 20 on the road vs. the Pirates, and September 11 at home against the visiting Phillies. Of all the teams that participated in this maligned event, the Diamondbacks' design was one of the few that showed real creativity—with a snake wrapping around the shirt, front and back.
- The game photos at right are the only ones located. They show player names sewn vertically along the right side in MLB's "Future Font," using three colors: metallic copper, turquoise, and white.
- Player numbers are bold and three-color.
- Actual game jerseys were auctioned by the Diamondbacks after the 1999 season and are now all in private hands. Team-issued jerseys have an embroidered Russell "R" logo on the right sleeve, while retail versions usually do not.

2008-2015 Hispanic Heritage

These black "Los D-backs" jerseys are visually identical across all years. Made of Cool Base fabric, they feature sand/red front lettering and player names, with red/tan numbers on the back. The sleeve ends are banded with tan/red/tan knit trim. The team's "DB" snake-head patch consistently appears on the left sleeve. Depending on the year, the right sleeve is either blank or features a sewn memorial patch.

As a border state with Mexico, Arizona has historically experienced heightened political tension surrounding immigration issues , and in many years there has been ome controversy in the local media around this game. In 2010, the team stated that the event was intended to recognize its Hispanic fan base, and not as a statement against Senate Bill 1070, which restricted immigration.

2008: August 30 (10th Anniversary patch)
2009: September 10
2010: September 4
2011: September 24 (All-Star Game patch)
2012: September 16
2013: September 14 ("19" memorial disc)
2014: September 27
2015: August 21, October 3

2011 Turn Back the Clock to 2001

- Until this point, the Diamondbacks had never participated in a Turn Back the Clock game—understandable, as the team was only 14 years old. On September 9, 2011, they celebrated their 2001 World Series title—won in just their fourth year of existence (a fact that still riles many other teams' fans)..
- They chose to wear the 2001 home white vest with purple pinstripes and the "A" logo. This was one of the uniform tops the club wore from 1998 through 2006, when its color scheme was purple, turquoise, copper, and black.
- The flag patch on the back of the neck was added in 2001 after the 9/11 attacks..
- In a press release about the game and reunion weekend, D-backs president and CEO Derrick Hall said: "The players on the 2001 team will always be remembered by D-backs fans for our proudest achievement. So we want to make sure we have as many of them return to Chase Field in September to recreate those special memories."

2012 Italian Heritage

On July 1, 2012, the Diamondbacks traveled to Milwaukee for the Brewers' on-field celebration of Italian Heritage Day. The Brewers are perhaps the all-time kings of special-uniform game days, and the Diamondbacks agreed to participate by wearing Italian-themed jerseys for the game.

The jerseys are Majestic BP-style in both weight and construction, with a distinctive feature: one red and one green side panel, representing the colors of the Italian flag. The unusual "i D-backs" wordmark appears in white/black/green. Back numbers are white/green, and player names are white. The Brewers also wore very flashy red and green jerseys.

On May 27, 2013, all MLB teams wore camouflage-lettered jerseys for Memorial Day as part of a league-wide initiative. The Diamondbacks served as the home team against the visiting Texas Rangers.

The desert camouflage on white was difficult to read, but the D-backs improved visibility with black outlines on the wordmark and player names, and red outlines on the numbers. These details made the design more legible on the field.

2013 Firefighters Tribute

A wildfire ignited by lightning and driven out of control by high winds killed 19 elite firefighters on June 30, 2013, in Yarnell, Arizona. The tragedy was deeply felt throughout the state.

In response, the Diamondbacks issued the following press release:

D-backs Honor Fallen Firefighters

The Arizona Diamondbacks are honoring the memory of 19 firefighters from Prescott, Ariz., who perished fighting the Yarnell fire with a series of tributes and a memorial patch that will remain on the team's jersey throughout the season.

During the July 5-14 homestand, D-backs players and coaches will wear newly-created black tribute jerseys with "Arizona" across the front and a white patch over the heart bearing the No. 19. These one-of-a-kind, game worn tribute jerseys and nameplates from the D-backs clubhouse are signed by the players and will be up for auction until Sunday, July 14 at dbacks.com/auctions. Proceeds from the online auction will benefit the fire relief efforts through the Arizona Diamondbacks Foundation.

Inset below: Prototype or mock-up used for promotional purposes shows reversed lettering colors compared to what was actually worn on the field, as seen in all other photos.

This, along with the Red Sox home "BOSTON" jersey worn after the Marathon bombing, marked the first time an MLB team created and wore a unique memorial jersey to honor a tragic event, rather than simply wearing an armband or patch. The jerseys were worn in every game from July 5 through July 14, after which they were auctioned as planned.

2013 Turn Back the Clock to 1998

These spot-on replicas of the Diamondbacks' 1998 alternate black jerseys were worn twice: on the road at Philadelphia on August 23, 2013, for the Phillies' Turn Back the Clock to the 1990s game, and at home on August 31, 2013, vs. the San Francisco Giants. They lack the 1998 Inaugural Season patch on the sleeve, using the 1999–2000 regular team patch instead. The "19" disc on the right sleeve is a memorial for the 19 firefighters killed earlier that summer in a wildfire-fighting accident in Arizona. Full-weight polyester jersey, exact replica lettering; numbers are turquoise/white/purple, and NOB is purple outlined with white.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1914 Federal League KC Packers

The Diamondbacks deserve credit for playing along with this scheme. On April 23, 2014, they visited the Chicago Cubs for the first of ten throwback games the Cubs held in 2014 to mark the 100th anniversary of the opening of Wrigley Field. In 1914, the Diamondbacks would not exist for another 84 years, Arizona had been a state for just over two years, and the city of Phoenix itself had been incorporated only 33 years prior. So, the D-Backs gamely donned the uniforms of the 1914 Kansas City Packers of the Federal League for the occasion, though they retained the team's alternate logo on the left sleeve. Knit jerseys have a full collar, but sleeves were kept short, though actual uniforms of 1914 had three-quarter length sleeves. In the past, when uniforms have been supplied with these awkward-length sleeves, players angrily hacked them off before the game started. Navy Block-style numbers on back, no player names are used.

2014 Memorial Day

For May 26, 2014's Memorial Day, when all teams in MLB again wore camouflaged wordmark jerseys, the D-backs pulled a fast one. They resurrected the general design of their 2013 special firefighter memorial jersey and rendered it in camo twill. No other teams in MLB created a special jersey design just for Memorial Day. In my estimation, it was a wise move. At least the camo twill is visible—and even unusually attractive—against the black background and outlined with dark red. The visitor that day was the San Diego Padres, who wore gray jerseys featuring camo lettering that was barely visible. Their usual team patch remains on the left sleeve.

2014 Alumni Night: Turn Back the Clock to 1999

On August 30, 2014, the Diamondbacks staged a throwback game to 1999 for Alumni Night, with former players attending pregame ceremonies. They wore a replica of the 1998–2000 "primary" home jersey, though historically, this style of jersey was worn far less than the other choices in those years. The Majestic uniforms are nearly identical to the Russell originals, with the only differences being the Majestic tagging and sleeve logos replacing Russell's. The team also revived the seldom-used white hats, which had rarely been worn by the club.

2015-2016 TBTC: “Throwback Thursdays” to 1998-2006

Worn eight times in 2015 and five times in 2016, the D-Backs brought back the 1998–2006 alternate vests for Thursday home games. These Majestic knits are very faithful reproductions—after all, it had only been a decade—and were almost certainly made using the same patterns used for the 2011 Turn Back the Clock game. There are no numbers on front. Back numbers are rendered in three-color purple/white/turquoise, with two-color turquoise/purple names on back.

By Steve Gilbert/MLB.com

March 5, 2015 — SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — The D-Backs will wear throwback uniforms for every Thursday home game during the 2015 regular season.

The retro jersey will be the alternate home vest uniform with purple pinstripes that the team wore from 1998 through 2006, and the team will incorporate the colors purple and teal in every game element at Chase Field. The Throwback Thursdays will mark the sixth time the D-Backs have worn a retro jersey in franchise history.

2015 Memorial Day

In as many years, the Diamondbacks have worn three different Memorial Day jerseys. The May 25, 2015 incarnation applies camo to the team's alternate red jersey for the first time. Given the red jersey and the black outlines throughout, the camo is legible. The front wordmark and back names, typically rendered in sand/black, closely resemble the normal design due to the sandy desert variety of camo used. The back numbers, usually black/sand, appear here in camo/black. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is colored in dark green/khaki/white instead of the usual red/white/blue.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palate might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Diamondbacks wear their home white jerseys with the red-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in blue, including their front logo as well as back numbers. Two-layer twill replaces the usual three-color front lettering on the jerseys. Player names on back are in blue. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

2016 St. Patrick's Day

The Diamondbacks go green for St. Patrick's Day 2016 in a Spring Training game held March 17. This Majestic Flex Base jersey is in solid green, with front logo and back numbers in white/gray, and player name in white—all in the Diamondbacks' special font. The gray layer is thin and light enough to disappear at a distance. The left sleeve has a version of the D-backs' snake patch reduced to shades of black, gray, and white. The right sleeve sports a white shamrock, a feature shared by many teams as part of the 2016 promotion. White knit trim encircles both sleeves.

2016 Mother's Day

Read the full story on MLB's Mother's Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Diamondbacks wear road gray jerseys (minus sublimated patterns, so not strictly either the road or alternate road) with the front logo lettering in pink with dark gray outlines, reduced from the typical three-color lettering. The player names on back are rendered in single-color pink, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. The Joe Garagiola right-sleeve memorial patch is used on this jersey as it was on their other standard jerseys. All jersey trim becomes pink.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Diamondbacks apply the camouflage trimmings to their alternate home white jerseys for the game on May 30. The typically three-color front lettering and front and back numbers are here rendered in two-color woodland camo with a black outline, and player names appear in single-color black. The gray gradient on the jersey back is light enough that it does not interfere greatly with the similarly colored lettering, though it is not as legible as a plain jersey back. Like other teams, their sleeve patches are reduced to shades of green, gray, and black, and trim elements are also simplified to single-color black from the usual teal/black/teal configuration. The Joe Garagiola right-sleeve memorial patch is used on this jersey as it was on their other standard jerseys.

2016-2017 Father's Day

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms Father's Day, Sunday, June 19. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white. The Diamondbacks wear their road gray jerseys (minus sublimated patterns, so not strictly either the road or alternate road) with the front logo lettering in light blue with dark gray outlines reduced from the typical three-color lettering. The player names on back are rendered in single-color light blue, while front and back numbers are light blue/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. The Joe Garagiola right-sleeve memorial patch is used on this jersey as it was on their other standard jerseys. All jersey trim becomes light blue. The style returns in 2017 without the memorial patch.

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Diamondbacks are at home and wear their home alternate jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Diamondbacks select the red twill version with blue outlines to replace their typically three-color front lettering and front and back numbers, with a blue player name on back. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. New for 2016, team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue, replacing team colors, and all jersey trim, normally teal/black/teal, becomes single-color red. The Joe Garagiola right-sleeve memorial patch moves to the left chest in deference to the flag patch.

2016 Hispanic Heritage

The D-Backs continue their long-standing tradition of “Los D-Backs” Hispanic Heritage jerseys after updating their team look. The new version is based on the team’s alternate black jersey, with the “A” logo replaced by “Los D-Backs” on front, and the addition of a sand/red front number. The rest of the jersey remains unchanged, including the “JOE” patch used on all jerseys in 2016. Worn September 16, 2016.

2017 Mother's Day

Pink-trimmed Mother's Day jerseys return on May 13–14, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic heat applied vinyl locker tag and team inventory tag inside the bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon glued on left chest; the pink Majestic sleeve logo; and the dark pink/light pink/white ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter applique stitched on the back of the collar. All multi-colored lettering is done in the lightweight-twill style. The Diamondbacks wear a simplified version of their alternate home white, minus sublimated patterns, with the front logo lettering in pink/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All trim, normally teal/black/teal, becomes gray.

Jersey front and tag photos from the collection of Keith de Laet

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Diamondbacks apply this style to their road gray jerseys as worn on May 27–29, 2017.

2017-2018 Independence Day (Home)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag.

Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill–appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 1–2, 2017 and July

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017 and August 24–26, 2018, the Diamondbacks wear jerseys with black bodies and red sleeves with white nicknames and red numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide red/white/red trim. The front features their home jersey lettering, here rendered in white/teal kiss-cut lightweight twill.

2017-2019 Hispanic Heritage

The D-Backs have honored Hispanic heritage with special uniforms since 2008, and starting in 2017, the team adds subtle patterned lettering to their black alternate to extend the recognition beyond just the "Los D-Backs" team name on front. Similar to the recent Spring Training jerseys, these feature sublimated printing on the main twill layer on the front wordmark, and back numbers, representing the flags of many Latin American countries. The effect is difficult to discern from a distance—likely for the best, given the team's already busy jerseys.

In 2018, they featured the D-Backs' 20th anniversary patch on the right sleeve. These were worn on September 9, 16, and 23 (with a gold ribbon patch on the left chest for pediatric cancer), 2017; May 5, and September 8 and 14, 2018; and August 31, and September 14, 16, and 28, 2019. The 2019 version omits the MLB150 patch on the right sleeve.

2018 Turn Back the Clock to 1998

As part of their season-long 20th anniversary celebration in 2018, the D-Backs threw back to several of their past uniforms—and despite only two decades of existence, they had many to choose from. On March 31 and April 19, they went back to the beginning with their inaugural 1998 home jersey. In terms of accuracy, these are spot-on as would be expected for a throwback of such recent vintage. Aside from the Majestic logo on the left sleeve of these full-knit jerseys and the anachronistic 20th anniversary patch on the right sleeve, they are indistinguishable from the originals.

The one-year-only “Inaugural Season” patch is also present on the left sleeve. Just like the originals, they feature the team’s first primary wordmark slanted across the front, with purple pinstripes and purple/turquoise front numbers, purple/white/turquoise back numbers, and turquoise/purple direct-sewn player names on back.

Just like the originals, they feature the team's "A" cap logo on front in turquoise/metallic copper/purple, with purple/white/turquoise back numbers and turquoise/purple player names on back.

As a happy reminder of the team's 2001 World Series win, this same set returned as a "Throwback Thursday" style worn in 2019 and 2021, and for one weekend only, August 11–13, 2023. The 2023 version included a sponsor patch on the base layer sleeve. The 2018–19 versions were by Majestic; the 2021 and 2023 versions were made by Nike.

2018 Memorial Day

The 2018 Memorial Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017 for most teams, but the D-Backs go in a different direction on May 26–28, 2018. Where most teams use dark olive green/black front lettering and numbers joined by solid-color black player names on back, the D-Backs employ an olive green/black/white version of their “A” logo on front of their black alternate, with white player names and olive green/white numbers on back. Unlike most teams, the D-Backs also retain their typical jersey trim for this holiday, here in red/black/red. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team-specific sleeve patches also are repeated from 2017 with an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the US military, is stitched to the right sleeve.

As part of their season-long 20th anniversary celebration in 2018, the D-Backs throw back to their 2007 home jersey on July 5. As with all the retro jerseys in the series, these Cool Base jerseys are quite accurate, as would be expected for a throwback of such recent vintage, aside from the new-style Majestic logo on the left sleeve and the anachronistic 20th anniversary patch on the right sleeve.

Just like the originals, the front lettering is red/sand/black with black/red/black braid slightly above the sleeve ends. Player names are red/black, and numbers are black/red. One very small error—if these are supposed to be the 2007 version of this set as the team says, the snake head logo on the sleeve should be different, as this jersey features the version used in 2008 and later. The D-Backs changed the logo in response to pressure from magician David Blaine, who has a similar logo (discussed in the Oddballs section), so the change was likely intentional to avoid conflict.

2019 Players Weekend

collection of Keith de Laet

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Diamondbacks wear a black version of their home jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in black/gray with gray nickname on back.

Prototypes and Oddballs

Pre-1998 Oddities

Three full years elapsed between the time the Diamondbacks were awarded their franchise on March 9, 1995 and the time the team first took the field, opening day of 1998. This gap explains a lot of oddball Diamondbacks gear one finds, including dead-stock official white New Era game caps worn (we believe) only once by the team.

Let's start with pages from the team's first official MLB style guide, reproduced here. Looks OK, right? Well, not exactly. On the next couple of pages we will look at some of the changes that took place between the November 5, 1995 uniform unveiling and opening day in April 1998, approximately 28 months later.

1. The inaugural sleeve patch: they never used this one on the field, yet this style patch found its way onto nearly every retail replica.
2. The purple alternate uniform top has lettering that has a completely different color combination from what was used in 1998.
3. The black warm-up top shown here may never have been used by the team on the field in the regular season. Many 1998 Diamondbacks baseball cards feature players wearing this jersey in studio shots, and the few game-action photos on baseball cards all appear to be from Spring Training, 1998.

On this page and the next are examples of the as-originally-planned purple jersey of 1995 that never saw action on the field. These purple jerseys have “Arizona” on front in purple/white/turquoise/black 3D drop shadow, a color combination that was never actually used by the team. Colors were shuffled and the main color used on field ended up being turquoise green. There is no sleeve end trim on this jersey style. Two-and-a-half years elapsed between the time that these uniforms were unveiled on November 5, 1995, and the first game was played. That’s a lot of idle time for management to fiddle with things!

A small white flag tag under front tail tag (circled) generally is a good indicator of a team-issue spec jersey and not one made for retail sale. This jersey's different letter coloring could have been another team experiment, or it could be someone's recreation, we don't know.

Both of the jerseys on these two pages have Russell Diamond Collection tagging, the example on the previous page shows the collar size tag usually seen on jerseys destined for retail sale, the one on this page has the tiny flag tagging usually found on team issued jerseys. They all sport the prototype team inaugural patch that was never used on the field but that found its way onto the retail jerseys sold during that period to expectant fans.

Compare the to the "Williams" jersey above, claimed to be game worn by its seller, with the other prototype and the actual game jersey on the prior page. We know this cannot be game worn because this variant of the purple jersey was never worn by the team on the field. But the lettering on the jersey might be team-authentic, as the team clearly was fiddling with things before their first game. For more food for thought on that topic, look at the home jersey two pages ahead which also is claimed to be original but has player numbers that are the wrong colors compared to those eventually used by the team on the field.

Consider that Russell was making authentic team merchandise for retail sale as early as Christmas 1995, and they certainly made a quantity of these purple jerseys before actual on-field designs were finalized. Remaining inventory was eventually dumped to the discounters. Examples of these are rather uncommon and a first-year oddity that have collector interest. They appear for sale on auction sites now and then. Rarely do sellers ever note that they are oddly-made early jerseys, probably because the sellers do not realize it themselves!

Besides the pre-opening day change to the inaugural patch, notice that huge, clunky number on the front of Danny Klassen's team portrait (far right). In these stock, posed photos, players were outfitted in sample uniforms that were not their own. Klassen actually opened the season with #65 on his uniform, not #4 as seen here. Diamondbacks seamstress Patsy Elmer relates this tale:

"Did you know that from day one, the Diamondbacks had very large (front) numbers and player name letters? I can't remember exactly when it happened, but they changed the sizes on both. I had just made a box FULL of their twill #'s and letters and I couldn't use them anymore because of that change. Then I had to start making the new smaller size. I was irritated because my stock was now useless to the team but it was much easier now getting those long names to fit on the jerseys."

Patsy went back to her files and produced some more historical oddities.

"I found an old set of cut-out numbers from the original larger size, and the back numbers with both outlines were 8" tall. The player name letters were much larger too and we used to leave points at the end of certain letters…..L, C, E, F, Z, N, T. At some point after the season started, the team asked that this be changed and we started cutting the sharp points off the letters, but I'm not 100% positive exactly when that happened. May have been the same time they made the letters smaller. The larger letters for the player names made it very difficult to lay out longer names, and get the right-looking arch because of the large flat bottoms on many of the letters, and so I was glad for the change. The front numbers were made smaller too, but by less than a half-inch. These changes were made after the season started"

Above: This team-spec style home jersey (note the tiny flag tag attached to the Russell jock tag) has nonstandard color player numbers both front and back, but has the proper inaugural patch as used on the field. More evidence of last-minute fiddling? We don't know.

I showed Patsy the photos of this #33 BELL jersey, from the auction archives of a major auction house, advertising it as a game used 1998 jersey. It has the Inaugural patch on the sleeve that was actually worn on the field, not the "pre-approval version" shown on the prior page. Notable is that the player numbers twill colors (both front and back) are swapped around, making Mariner Green (turquoise) the top color, not purple as was used on every game jersey I had seen since the beginning. Her response:

> "The green color used on the Diamondbacks jerseys is called Mariner Green, and it is the same color twill as used on the Seattle Mariners' uniforms. I don't have evidence that the Mariner Green was ever on the top of the white jersey. I'm even looking at the huge spacing between the 3's. Russell was making sample jerseys as well, and this is probably one that they did, not me. I would never have let the jersey go out with that kind of wide spacing between the numbers; it's not right."
> When I asked Patsy if this was perhaps an early season example, she responded, "Here's a photo of the jerseys that were hung up as we finished sewing each name that was announced at the expansion draft party in November of 1997. We were behind the stage during the event at the Civic Center. As players were drafted we sewed their names on jerseys and hoisted them up to the rafters. You can see that the numbers are purple, and the front numbers were the same (purple too)."

The front numbers on the Bell jersey shown seem to be the original too-large size, but Patsy notes that the player names are clearly the smaller size on this example and have the points cut off.

More Oddballs

Left: Even if you are an expert, you will probably look at this BP jersey and say "so what?" But it is indeed an oddball...Notice: it has 1997-1999 style tail tagging, but it uses the color combination on the wordmark only seen on the pre-1998 inaugural season spring training BP...and yet it is a button-front when those early jerseys were 2-button pullovers; so the 4-piece split down the middle embroidered patches for the front were not something that would have been lying around because no other jersey used this color combination! It also has the 1999-and-after sleeve patch. The back is blank, but it has an embroidered Majestic sleeve logo that is only found on team-issue BP jerseys.

This page provides proof that not everything on the field always follows the rules.

Above: Randy Johnson wears a retail store batting practice jersey, noticeable because it clearly has a decal-style Majestic logo on its sleeve (circled).

Imagine trying to convince knowledgeable buyers that either of these items is truly "game used".

Above: The Diamondbacks' first season was 1998. There was no team in 1997. So what is the explanation for these players wearing the early BP jersey style—with the 1997-only Jackie Robinson sleeve patch? According to the caption, this is a rookie league team that pre-dated the MLB Diamondbacks playing a single game!

Magician David Blaine v. Arizona Diamondbacks?

2007 Diamondbacks Logo

David Blaine Logo

Revised 2008 Diamondbacks Logo

- A dispute over the Diamondbacks' new logo for 2007 arose when magician/illusionist David Blaine claimed that the D-backs stylized DB/snake head logo used on sleeve patches for all the team's new game jerseys looked just like his DB/"Split Club" logo, trademarked a decade earlier.
- In what appears to be a gentlemanly settlement, the Diamondbacks slightly modified the logo for 2008, adding "snake eyes," changing the color of the tongue, and moving the tongue closer in to the bottom of the "D" and "B."
- Did this fix the problem? You be the judge. Apparently David Blaine was satisfied and decided not to sue.

2007 Prototype Alternate Red

Photos: Gary Taylor

Here's a prototype for the Diamondbacks uniform revisions of 2007, in this case, a sample of the team's alternate Sedona red ersey. As we have often seen in such examples, the use of "PLAYER" and "7" (where "7" stands for "2007") is typical of prototypes, as is the size 46. Further, note the presence of the interior sample tag that reads DIAAJ-07 B" for Diamondbacks Alternate Jersey, 2007, (version) B." The only difference in this prototype from what the team wore on-field in 2007 is the left sleeve patch. Here, the eventual db/snake-head-shaped patch was swapped out for a diamond-shaped patch with an "AZ" ligature in it. Given the legal hot water that the team got it from magician David Blaine because of that snake-head/db patch, they may have been better served adopting this option B.

2016 Prototype Alternate Black

Photos: Gary Taylor

The Diamondbacks laid it all out on the table with their 2016 redesign, introducing bold, printed patterns to their jerseys, pants, and caps. Here is a sample of one of the six(!) jerseys they introduced that year, their black alternate. Though atypical, the use of a player's name and number (rather than "PLAYER" and a year for the number) does occur, and Paul Goldschmidt was a team star at the time. However, the size 46, and the tell-tale sample tag heat-pressed inside the placket tell us the full story. The tag reads "DBKS-AJ-BLACK-D1-3-2016 (ND)." That means Diamondbacks Alternate Jersey, Black, Design 1, (version) 3, 2016." The "(ND)" is a mystery, perhaps it relates to the diamond patterns on the shoulders and sides? Similar samples of pants designs for the 2016 season (see photos at right) show that the team was looking at different iterations of the printed patterns, which may have also been present on other iterations of the jerseys. More research is required on that element. However, this sample closely represents what the team chose for 2016, with the exception of the missing team sleeve patch, and the lack of the embroidered "Majestic" text under the manufacturer logo on the left sleeve.

Above: Photos of sample pants, with slightly different printed diamond gradient designs, that the team reviewed when choosing their 2016 uniform sets. These indicate that at least two different diamond patterns were considered.

2017 Sample Home?

If you've spent any time with this publication, you know that when you see "PLAYER" and a number representing the year on the back of a jersey, you're probably looking at a prototype. But for this example, it isn't quite so simple. By all accounts, this is identical to what the Diamondbacks wore as one of their home jerseys from 2016-2019. And, here, we see "PLAYER" and "17" on back. But if this jersey were introduced in 2016, why a 17? The team did change the lettering on their two road jerseys in 2017, but not on their home, and this sample shows no changes from the 2016 version. Also curious, the jersey is size 44 (samples are often 46) and the wash tag code is the unusual 73S0. Flex Base were usually 0730 for team issue and 7300 for retail. However, because these complex Diamondbacks jerseys had to be made differently, they were assigned a separate code of S730 for team issued and 73S0 for retail. So it seems likely that this is a retail authentic that was lettered with "PLAYER" and "17" for reasons that are unclear. Any reader help on this one would be appreciated!

2024 Prototype Home

In advance of the switch to Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) in the 2024 season, Nike made prototypes of existing jerseys on the new template for team review. By the point that these samples were made, teams had already seen some early drafts with many missing or incorrect details, just to get a sense of the materials and construction. However, many of the later samples, like the one shown here, were very close to what eventually appeared on the field in 2024. This Diamondbacks home version is one of those examples, but with a twist. The team also changed its uniforms for the 2024 season, so this prototype was a sample for both a new style and a new template.

Note the sample information that is on the Nike tag, which reads “DBACKS HOME JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT”, with 44 being the size, which was not typical in earlier Nike samples, which were usually size 46. There is also a small, handwritten “6” on the corner of the tag, which we have seen in many other Nike sample tags, though the numbers differ, and this may be the highest one we have seen. Also, the designation of “regular fit” was something not commonly seen on jersey tags, so it may have indicated the intent to use “bucket sizing” on jerseys, where there were a handful of standard cuts in different proportions available to players rather than the specific customizations of years past. Nike’s 2024 pants were also done in bucket sizing, which was very unpopular with players. It is unclear what the “FZ3164-115” text on the front tag means. It is likely it is an internal production codes, as all 2024 samples we have seen have different codes in these spots that we have not yet deciphered.

We don’t know if all prototypes of the team’s new-for-2024 jerseys were mocked up in VPE, or if some were early enough to have been on Nike Flex Base. What we do know is that this version must have been later in the process, and must have been to the team’s liking, as it mirrors exactly what they wore on-field at home in 2024, including the perforated numbers.

2024: Whoops!

As if 2024 weren't eventful enough for the Diamondbacks (with a whole new uniform set) and Nike/Fanatics (for all of the issues with the uniforms), D-Backs infielder Kevin Newman took to the field on May 7 with his road jersey missing the knit trim around the collar and placket. Nike took all the blame for the other 2024 uniform "enhancements" that were later reversed, since they designed this template. But this error is on Fanatics, who produces the uniforms, and clearly dropped the ball on this one.

2025 Prototype City Connect 2.0

The Diamondbacks introduce a City Connect 2.0 in 2025, which takes elements of its CC 1.0 and applies some throwback touches that nod to the team's (and state's) history. Here we have an unchosen version of that jersey, which was presented for the team's review.

The details of the chosen jersey are described earlier in this chapter, and this prototype conforms closely to them except for two details. First, the final version of this jersey bears "Serpientes" lettering across the chest, picked up from the team's CC 1.0, rather than the "Arizona Diamondbacks" lettering shown on this sample. The front lettering here is a nod to the team's original jerseys and lettering from their earliest BPs. Second, because the prototype was likely made up at least a year or two in advance, the assumption by Nike was that the numbers would be perforated. We have seen many Nike samples that defaulted to perforated numbers (perhaps in an effort to get teams to go along with them). However, given the backlash to Nike uniforms in 2024, many teams reverted back to non-perforated numbers in 2025. When the final version of this jersey appeared on field during the season, it no longer had perforated numbers, and had much larger player name lettering, likely victims of the "market correction" against many of the reviled 2024 changes.

As we would expect, the jersey uses "PLAYER" and "25" on back, where 25 stands for the year the jersey will be used. This practice is almost universal for Nike samples of the era. Note also the sample information that is on the Nike tag, which reads "DBACKS CC JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT", with 44 being the size, which was not typical in earlier Nike samples, which were usually size 46. Here, "CC" stands for City Connect, and there is also a small, handwritten "5" on the bottom corner of the tag, something that many Nike samples of the year have, though the numbers differ. Also, the designation of "regular fit" was something not commonly seen on jersey tags, so it may have indicated the intent to use "bucket sizing" on jerseys, where there were a handful of standard cuts in different proportions available to players rather than the specific customizations of years past. Nike's 2024 pants were also done in bucket sizing, which was very unpopular with players. It is unclear what the "HJ4614-545" text on the front tag means. It is likely it is an internal production codes, as all 2025 samples we have seen have different codes in these spots that we have not yet deciphered.

World Champions 2001 DIAMONDBACKS

Never used as a sleeve patch was the team's 2001 World Champions logo. The Diamondbacks made no statement on their uniforms in 2002 about their accomplishment; this expansion team winning its first World Series in only its fourth year of existence was frankly unheard of and admittedly unsettling to fans of teams who have been waiting decades for a championship of their own. I am sure this was a consideration in the team's decision to downplay its status as MLB Champs.

2023-2025 Diamondbacks Advertising Patches

Spring Training 2023

Regular Season 2023

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Diamondbacks struck a sponsor patch deal with Avnet, an electronic components company. The patches first appeared in Spring Training 2023 and were square. By Opening Day, the shape of the patch was changed to outline the company logo more closely. .

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team's normal logo patches remain on each jersey, on the opposite sleeve from the ad patch.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Curt Schilling 2003 Arizona Diamondbacks Home Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: March 2, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0302J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2001-2006 style Rawlings size 50 (marked and measured) white with purple pinstripes full-weight knit six-button home jersey, lettered for #38, pitcher Curt Schilling. Purple, metallic copper and dark blue-green team stylized "A" crest on the left chest, #38 on back in purple, white, and the same green. "SCHILLING" arched above in green outlined with purple. All lettering matches team templates and is original and unaltered. Team patch is sewn to the left sleeve. MLB silhouetted batter patch at the center of the back of the neck in white, green, and purple. Schilling has signed his name boldly in blue sharpie on the back. (I have no professional opinion on the signature).

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Majestic Authentic Collection locker tag is sewn to the outside left tail, below is a flag tag: "50" denoting the size. Schilling jerseys often are marked to show 1" extra length; this one does not and is a standard 34" length for a size 50 jersey. The inside seam tag shows Majestic's code of "0006", a style designation for jerseys prepared for team issue. The Majestic logo is embroidered in purple on the left sleeve end. While the jersey is not team tagged (typical of Diamondbacks jersey of this vintage) this style with the Majestic sleeve logo could have been worn by Schilling in only 2003, his final year on the team.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey is the correct size for Schilling though without his custom tailoring included, and is prepared identically to team issue. All elements are still crisp and new. It shows very light use, the wrinkling of the tags inside the garment suggest it was washed a time or two before it was signed.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion this jersey was issued to and worn by Curt Schilling in 2003.

Chapter 18

Los Angeles Dodgers

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys 1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Dodgers Uniform History Notes

- Without question, the Los Angeles Dodgers are second only to the New York Yankees when considering the tradition and consistency of the team's uniforms throughout the decades. A reference to people who "dodged trolleys" in the streets of Brooklyn in the early years of the 20th century, the nickname first appeared in the now familiar script on the front.
- Dodgers' road jerseys over the years have had but a few changes: they began the use of a front cursive script for 1938 using the city name of "Brooklyn" on road jerseys. These changed to "Dodgers" for the 1946 season. This style remained from 1946 through 1958, the team's first year in Los Angeles.
- The bold, red front numbers first appeared on home jerseys for the 1952 season, making the Dodgers the first team to display player numbers on the front of uniforms. In 1959, numbers were added to the fronts of road jerseys, and the script on the road gray jersey changed to read "Los Angeles." The team's home and road uniforms remained consistent from 1959–1969.
- For 1970, the road jersey changed to say "Dodgers" once again. For 1971, white/blue/white knit trim was added to the road jerseys on the sleeve ends, shoulders, and collar. 1971 is a one-year style, which included blue player numbers with white outlines on the back—no longer in the signature Dodger Block font, but in a standard two-color block style used only that year.
- The Dodgers slipped into the double-knit era almost unannounced in 1972, as the home 1972 knit jerseys are nearly indistinguishable from the 1971 flannels they replaced, except for the addition of player names.
- For 1972, road jerseys featured a few changes. They remained button-front, but were stripped of the knit trim they had prior, becoming a plain, solid gray similar to the 1970 road jerseys. The team logo script and back numbers—which had been outlined in white for a single year in 1971—reverted to a plain, one-color blue design. Player names were added in 1972
- Since 1972 through to this writing in 2025, home jerseys have remained identical to the casual observer. Only a very critical eye would notice the variations pointed out in the following pages.
- Road jerseys change occasionally, adding and subtracting trim elements and white outlines; 1977 brought trim to the sleeve ends and thick white outlines to the Dodgers wordmark, back numbers, and player name lettering, giving the classic staid jersey additional visual interest. Whether coincidental or not, the Yankees—their AL counterpart in tradition—had done a similar upgrade to their road jerseys four years prior in 1973 (sans player names on the back).
- After 30 years, "Los Angeles" script was brought back to the road jersey for the 1999 season. There were several minor alterations to the road jersey script, trim, and outlines between 1999–2012.
- A blue alternate jersey was introduced in 1999, inspired after the team had worn its blue batting practice jerseys for a few games in the middle of the 1998 season (called the "Think Blue" series). The team wore them sparingly in 1999. Though this uniform remained as an official alternate in the MLB Style Guide for the Dodgers through 2006, and some were made for retail sale, the blue jerseys were not seen on the field again after 1999. A blue alternate (the same as the Spring Training jersey of 2016) returned to the team catalog for 2017, but it was used only in Spring Training and occasionally for batting practice.
- A City Connect uniform was introduced in 2021—a lazy design that seemed like an afterthought—essentially replicating the solid blue Spring Training jersey but with "Los Dodgers" replacing the "Dodgers" script wordmark, and the addition of what looked like black spray paint around the sleeve ends, a nod to "the city's street art culture and murals." The jersey was initially paired with matching blue pants, later changed to a white pants pairing, reportedly to address negative feedback.
- In 2024, the Dodgers became the first team to release a City Connect 2.0 uniform, replacing their uninspired "Los Dodgers" look with a cream-colored jersey jumbled with symbolic design elements. "Los Angeles" is written in a modern typeface inspired by 1950s LA Memorial Coliseum signage, while the font of the number and player name—oddly placed below the back number—references mid-century Brooklyn aesthetics. A unique touch includes a galaxy-of-stars speckled fabric (resembling confetti).
- The Dodgers did not participate in any Turn Back the Clock games until the 2005 season. There were lingering hard feelings between club ownership and management over the circumstances surrounding the team's departure from Brooklyn after the 1957 season, and the Los Angeles Dodgers refused to pay nostalgic homage to their roots in New York. But starting in 2005, the team's new ownership embraced nostalgia and Turn Back the Clock games—with Brooklyn references now commonplace.

The Iconic Dodgers Jersey

The Dodgers uniform is the icon of the National League. Basically unchanged since 1938, the Dodgers' look has been rivaled in consistency only by the Yankees of the American League. Only the most critical observer would notice any differences in the jerseys in the period between 1972 and today. But there are all sorts of minor changes and clues that distinguish years from each other.

From 1978 through the end of 1998, the Dodgers did not use tackle twill lettering on their jerseys. They used a special polyester fabric they called "Dodger Twill" that was more like the fabric of the jersey itself—thinner, not as shiny, and with more stretch. The idea was that similar fabrics would look better together—perhaps similar to how felt lettering looked on vintage flannel jerseys. The team finally switched to standard tackle twill in 1999.

Dodger front numbers use a distinct font referred to as Dodger Front Bold, and front numbers are a very prominent 5" in height. The same font style is used on home jersey backs from 1972–1977 and on road jersey backs from 1972–1976. After these dates, Dodger back numbers switch to the more universally used Block style

The team experimented by adding a blue alternate jersey in 1999, but it was seldom worn and eventually banished.

Your author will admit a fascination with the Dodgers—maybe it's the tradition, or maybe it's the Hollywood connection that caused uniformed Dodger players to appear occasionally as guest stars on TV shows like The Brady Bunch, Mr. Ed and The Munsters back in my childhood in the 1960s. Somehow, even though their uniform design has gone basically unchanged for decades, I have managed to fill 141 pages documenting those variations.

Year by Year Summary

While the home jersey appears to be unchanged for decades, there have been tiny variations over the years. See pages ahead for details.

 The Dodgers continued to use Rawlings jerseys during 1992-94, even though MLB had named Russell the official supplier of Major League baseball. Therefore, no manufacturer logo appeared on game worn jersey sleeves these years.

 A team set was made by Rawlings in 2000 but never worn on the field. No team issue blue jerseys were made after 2000, yet they were still listed in the official MLB Style Guide through 2007!

Dodgers shrunk their front numbers by 1/8" in 2011 and later so that they would fit better on the front of the BP jersey, whose side panels interfered with placement of the 5" numbers. Even after the BP jerseys changed and lost the side panel interference, the numbers stayed the same smaller size.

More Dodgers Notes

1939 Dodger team script is more rustic than the current version.

The Dodgers call the royal blue shade they use for their lettering "Dodger Blue." It is a shade darker than royal blue.

Front numbers are always red, back numbers always Dodger Blue (outlined with white 1980–2007 home, and 1977–2007 road; returning to plain blue with no outline in 2008).

Front numbers are an extra-bold, shorter version of the full Block font, approximately 4¾" tall. Although they are similar, the front numbers are a slightly different design than the back. In other words, shrinking the back numbers to put them on the front does not look right—because it is not.

- No nameplates ever used
- Dodger team tagging and manufacturer labels are often found hidden inside the garment, sometimes on the inside of the back shirt tail.

Comparison of front number with post-1979 back number—close, but not identical, as the proportions differ. Up through 1979, the Dodgers front number style was also worn on jersey backs.

Dodgers team tagging usually found inside the shirt tail, inside the neck, or even inside the back shirt tail. It is seldom visible on the outside of the garment.

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

1970-1971 Home

Six of the seven Dodgers farm teams in 1970–1971 were also named "Dodgers." While the parent club supplied some teams with used uniforms, many were made specifically for the minor league clubs without having seen MLB duty.

1970

The 1970–1971 Dodgers home uniforms are the team's final flannels. They feature the iconic Dodgers script with underline, rendered in felt on the front, used on home uniforms since 1938.

Numbers on the front and back are in the Dodgers' own variation of the Block font—red on the front and blue on the back.

Goodman and Spalding produced the 1970 Dodgers home jerseys; Goodman alone in 1971. Each used a slightly different version of the Dodger script.

1970 Road

The 1970 Dodgers road jersey is made of flannel and was produced exclusively by Rawlings. All lettering is felt.

Aside from the color of the jersey fabric, it is identical to the team's home jersey.

The font for the numbers on both the front and back is the Dodgers' special version of Block.

Nearly all of these saw hard duty in the minor leagues and Spring Training, and finding one in good condition is difficult.

1971 Road

Barry Halper Collection

1971 was the final year of flannels for the Dodgers. The road jersey is a one-year style variation, also made by Rawlings.

Retaining the look of prior years, the 1971 edition adds white outlining to the team script.

Back numbers are no longer in Dodger Block. They are two-color Block Standard—blue outlined with white—used for this year only. Lettering is two-color felt.

White/blue/white trim is added to the sleeve end, collar opening, and also across the tops of the sleeves.

Baseball cards from 1972–1975 show that these one-year uniforms continued to be worn in Spring Training for several more years.

1973

1972 marks the first year that double knits replaced flannels. All lettering is now tackle twill, and player names on back appear for the first time.

Local manufacturer Goodman & Sons exclusively made the Dodgers' home uniforms from 1972–1986. Goodman's manufacturer tagging is sewn in the back of the neck.

Jerseys from 1972–1975 are usually year- and set-tagged in the tail. Jerseys from 1976 and 1977 are not team-tagged.

The Dodgers script during these years is often rendered in a lighter weight (skinnier letters). Most hobby examples have had their player names—and sometimes numbers—replaced, as they were usually stripped for reuse in Spring Training or the minor leagues.

1972-1973 Road

For 1972, the first year of Dodger knits, Rawlings was selected to supply the team's road jerseys. All lettering is tackle twill. Note the extra-long tail under the front "Dodgers" script.

Bold back numbers use the same font as the front. Jerseys are flag-tagged and also chain-stitch embroidered with the two-digit year. Some—but not all—also have the player's last name embroidered. A red Rawlings tag is stitched inside the neck.

Most were sent to the minors, stripped of names—and sometimes numbers—and heavily worn; finding one with its original name and number intact is unusual.

1974-1976 Road

In 1974, the Dodgers switched their road jersey supplier from Rawlings to Goodman and Sons, unifying both home and road uniforms under the same manufacturer.

At a casual glance, the Goodman issues appear identical to the earlier Rawlings versions. However, there are several variations. The Dodgers script on the front has a lighter stroke, the tail is shorter, and the number fonts are slightly different.

Goodman used dark buttons, and the player name font was their own variation of block—narrower and with a lighter stroke than Rawlings'. Tail tagging from 1974–1976 is machine-stitched on satiny fabric sewn to the jersey tails.

April 8, 1974: a one-day armband was worn—see the Patches section.

1976

1974 and 1975 jerseys are year/set tagged; 1976 jerseys have no team tagging. 1976 jerseys had the National League Centennial patch on the left sleeve Most jerseys today have replacement patches, as originals were stripped after the season or during 1977 Spring Training.

1977-1979 Road

Steve Kraljic collection

n 1977, Goodman added subtle white/blue/white knit trim to the sleeve ends of road jerseys. Beginning that year, all blue lettering is outlined with white.

The back number font changes to a lighter stroke and is proportioned differently from the front numbers.

Starting in 1978, all blue lettering fabric is changed to a matte-finished, stretchy double-knit that informally becomes known as “Dodger Twill” (see two pages ahead). The white and red twill lettering remains the standard tackle twill.

We believe “Set C 78” tagged jerseys (not pictured) were sewn for the postseason.

1978 Set B

1978 Set A

1979

The Dodgers front script gets slightly bolder for 1978. The tail beneath the wordmark is marginally shorter. All blue lettering changes to Dodger Twill (see next page).

Continuing the style started in 1972, back numbers use the same font as the "Dodgers Front Bold" style, only larger.

Even though the road jerseys changed to two-color lettering for 1978, home jersey lettering remained one color.

1978-1998 “Dodger Twill” Blue Lettering

While most MLB teams had switched to using the more durable tackle twill for team and player name/number lettering on their flannel jerseys during the 1960s, the Dodgers had steadfastly stayed with layered, stitched felt through 1971. While they switched to tackle twill lettering in 1972, concurrent with the change to double knit jerseys, starting in 1978 they chose to use a different fabric for their blue team name and back number lettering, which has become known as “Dodger Twill.” It is less shiny and has a more stretchy, open weave than tackle twill. A fine detail for sure—the team aesthetically found it more harmonious to match the finish, stretch, and texture on the jersey’s knit cloth than using the stiffer, shinier, less stretchy tackle twill lettering. Oddly, Dodger Twill was used only for the blue elements of the lettering. The red front numbers as well as lettering white outlines (when used) were all made of standard tackle twill.

The difference is so subtle that one must examine the blue lettering very closely to tell at all. It is all but undetectable in still-photo viewing. The main difference is seen when the fabric is in motion. Tackle twill reflects the light differently depending on its angle to the viewer, while Dodger Twill is flat and totally non-reflective.

While the team demanded the change, uniform makers tolerated it. Dodger twill was harder to work with: harder to cut, place, and stitch without fraying. I can tell you for a fact it was not always used on team on-field uniforms. I have examined and restored several Goodman jerseys that used all tackle twill lettering. But Dodger Twill was generally used on the field through 1998.

Rawlings attempted to get the team to accept tackle twill lettering when they took over the team uniform contract in 1987, but the Dodgers refused the request. However, they did ask Rawlings to sew the dark royal blue Dodger Twill lettering on with darker navy blue thread, complaining that in repeated washings, the matching dark royal blue thread would bleach to purple and look unsightly. Examine Dodgers on-field game jerseys of the 1987–1990s and you will notice this detail.

1987 was the first year that “authentic” on-field jerseys were made for retail sale. While distribution was very sparsely limited from 1987 through Russell’s assumption of the league contract in the early 1990s, Authentic Collection Dodger jerseys made specifically for retail sale from 1987–1998 featured lettering that was indiscriminately either tackle twill or Dodger Twill.

For the 1999 season, the Dodgers changed their road uniform and added a short-lived blue alternate, and finally ceased using Dodger Twill—adopting tackle twill in a shade called “New York Blue.”

Dodgers Jerseys in Spring Training/Minor Leagues

During the 1970s and ’80s, Dodger home and road jerseys both bore the team name, making them ideal for reuse in Spring Training and the minor leagues. In most years, the team had at least four—and sometimes as many as seven—minor league clubs, and the majority of these clubs wore the name “Dodgers” on their chests.

The collector market for game-worn jerseys was virtually nonexistent during this era. As such, even jerseys worn by star players were sent to the minors and used to the point of destruction.

The Dodgers used names on the back of all jerseys starting in 1972, and team policy was never to use nameplates. When jerseys were sent down from the majors, names had to be removed one letter at a time. Sometimes that process was not done carefully, resulting in weakened fabric, slices, and holes. Sometimes both names and numbers were removed.

Today, decades later, some of these jerseys are being painstakingly restored. Shown here are three examples that have been painstakingly restored.

Jerry Reuss Collection and photos

1980 Dodgers jerseys are a strange lot.

- Many, but not all, of the jerseys issued in 1980 carried a unique tag in the collar that said, "Manufactured Exclusively for W.A. Goodman and Sons by Mizuno Corporation, Osaka, Japan."
- They had a small flag tab noting the size. Others had the standard Goodman tag; these may have been holdover jerseys from 1979 that were still in stock to be used up.
- Back lettering is now blue over white, and the numbers are skinnier, matching the font used on the road jerseys.
- The buttons on most (but not all) are a rubbery plastic, two-hole design with "World Win" debossed twice into each one.
- All 1980 jerseys used Dodger Twill for the blue lettering. Some 1980 jerseys had the front Dodger script outlined in white twill, but not all did.
- The 1980 All-Star Game patch was sewn on the left sleeve.
- Variations are shown on this page.

All 1980 Dodgers road jerseys feature blue Dodger Twill over white tackle twill lettering, with red tackle twill front numbers. They also have white/blue/white sewn-on knit trim at the sleeve ends.

Many of the same oddities noted in the home jerseys carry over to these as well. For example, even though this jersey has the special Mizuno one-year “World Win” buttons, it bears a standard Goodman collar tag—not the Mizuno version.

Pitcher Jerry Reuss has generously provided us with many photos of his own game-worn jerseys. He wore this one when pitching his no-hitter in 1980. Notice the 1980-only Mizuno/Japan tagging.

The Dodgers' extra-wide white outlining of player name and number is nicely shown on this example.

Lined jerseys for cool weather use: Former Major League pitcher Jerry Reuss has taken the time to go through his collection of game worn jerseys and has provided photos to share. I noticed a mesh lining inside this jersey, and when I asked him about it, he noted that two of his other Dodgers jerseys also had this feature—one worn June 27, 1980, at chilly Candlestick Park in San Francisco, another issued for the 1981 World Series, and one of his road uniform tops from 1981. Conversely, he notes that his 1980 home jersey does not have the lining inside.

The Dodgers apparently lined some uniforms this way to help keep players warmer in cold-weather games. The mesh lining is designed to trap a thin layer of body heat against the skin. It's not surprising that the home jersey in his collection is unlined, given Los Angeles' welcoming climate.

Examples with set B or C tags typically come from years when the Dodgers participated in the postseason. Collectors have suggested that these fresh sets may have been created to help the team look good on national television—a believable theory.

Goodman road jerseys from 1981–1986 are very similar to those made from 1978–1980. Comparatively, the team script on the front is more even and "corporate" looking after 1980, with more consistent outlines on lettering—everything looks less hand-cut than it did in the pre-1981 period.

The use of Rawlings-style block numbers with white outlines on the back continues.

Goodman continues to use filled-in centers on letters like "A," "D," "R," "O," and "U," even though these letters are typically open in standard block fonts.

Team tagging (year and set) ends after 1981, so one of the few ways to determine a jersey's issue year is by identifying the commemorative sleeve patches—something the Dodgers used frequently.

When Rawlings became the official uniform supplier to MLB in 1987, the Dodgers made the switch. The home jersey is made exclusively by Rawlings from 1987–1994.

A minor change—the white outlines around the back numbers and names were now consistently narrower than Goodman's had been. Rawlings' logo script was embroidered in blue at the end of the right sleeve from 1987–1991. However, from 1992–1994, while Rawlings still made the Dodgers' jerseys, the sleeve end was plain, as Russell took over the contract of "official" supplier to MLB. Contractually, Rawlings jerseys could no longer display their branding.

The Dodgers specified that manufacturer and team tagging be sewn inside the back tail, out of view. Rawlings included year/set tags in team-issued jerseys—a change from Goodman, who had not done so from 1982–1986.

Long-time Dodgers team art director Ross Yoshida tells us: "Sometime in the '80s, we asked Rawlings to sew the blue lettering on our jerseys using the darkest shade of navy, so that the thread wouldn't look as bad when it faded in the wash. From my understanding, it was an experiment. Look at your Dodger jerseys and see what kind of thread they use!"

Russell takes over as the supplier of Dodgers jerseys starting in 1995, and other than the small "R" added to the right sleeve end, there is no visible change to the jersey design. The front numbers remain Dodger Front Block Bold, back names and numbers are two-color Block blue/white. As in the past, manufacturer's tags are usually (but not always) hidden inside the garment, out of view. Retail sale jerseys have the tags sewn to the outside front shirt tail.

1999 Alternate

For a few games in June of 1998, the Dodgers had worn their blue BP jerseys as game jerseys in a promotional stunt named “Think Blue.” Management decided to capitalize on the idea by introducing an alternate blue jersey for use during the 1999 season.

Unlike the team’s crisp BP, this jersey was a rather busy affair, with a three-color, double-outlined front team script and back numbers, along with two-color red/light gray front numbers. The team LA patch was sewn to the right sleeve, also layered in three colors, and the placket and sleeve ends were trimmed in gray/blue/gray knit. Topping things off was the 1999-only Dodger Heroes patch sewn to the left sleeve.

This jersey was worn only during the first week of June 1999 at home. (That included the interleague series with the Angels best remembered for the brawl between the Dodgers and visiting Angels, which featured Chan Ho Park’s infamous “jump-kick.”)

Dodgers Wordmark: Obscure Lettering Facts

In 1999, the team logo was slightly "tweaked" without the team's authorization… the slant of the lettering was increased, the spacing between the letters widened, and the tail under the logo grew too long. The Dodgers' art department took action with their apparel suppliers to repair the logo, though the changes did not take effect until 2003.

The Dodgers sent this internal communication to their apparel suppliers in 2002, giving them specific instructions to correct the team's logo script on all jerseys and to discard any old patterns.. (Courtesy Los Angeles Dodgers)

You would have to be a real eagle eye to spot the problem in this picture. Dodgers' art director Ross Yoshida has such an eye. In this 2006 publicity picture showing manager Grady Little with newly acquired player Rafael Furcal, the two jerseys are different. The one on the right is the unacceptable and banished "tweaked logo" style jersey, with its uneven letter thicknesses, too-wide spacing, and too-long tail under the wordmark.

Rafael is holding the jersey with the correct logo at the left. Other than the tail length and letter thicknesses, the most noticeable differences are the shapes of the letters "o," "e," and "r."

As for Grady, I guess a few of the old jerseys were sitting around the clubhouse. "Waste not want not."

Think anybody else beside Ross noticed this? I doubt it.

As referenced on the prior pages, we are showing the two variants side by side here because otherwise you would be hard-pressed to notice the differences. Team royal/white/gray LA patch is added to the left sleeve (except in 1999, when it is sewn to the right sleeve while the "Heroes" patch occupies the left sleeve). Russell makes the 1999 version; Rawlings, 2000–2002; then Majestic, 2003–2006.

The team crest and number/lettering fabric is changed from the former Dodger Twill to regular tackle twill beginning in 1999, which is shinier and less flexible. Back names and numbers are two-color Dodger blue outlined with white. Front numbers are not outlined.

NOB is eliminated for 2005 and 2006. However, even with more room on the back, the numbers remain the same size as before.

2008 Cool Base

Both home and road jerseys lose their two-layer blue over white tackle twill player numbers on the back. Back numbers are now one-color Dodger blue. The last time Dodger jerseys had bold, single-layer back numbers was 1979. However, the numbers were bolder back then. The 2007 version simply uses the top layer of the block font, which no other team in baseball uses as a single-color design.

Single-color player names return to the back of both home and road jerseys. The “LA” patch on the sleeve of both jerseys is also simplified, losing all the outlining. It is now solid blue.

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10-20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of old.

2019 — as used in Spring Training and as a BP jersey.

In 2016, the Dodgers were one of a few teams (like the Yankees, Phillies, and Cardinals) that “created” a new jersey for use in Spring Training, rather than basing it on a current alternate in their lineup. The Dodgers lacked a solid-color alternate, which forced this move, and the team opted for a style reminiscent of their 1995–2002 batting practice jerseys.

In 2017, the team officially lists the Spring Training model (minus the highway sign sleeve patch and special patterned twill) as a new home game alternate. According to our Dodgers sources, it was never worn in a game in 2017. It was removed from the alternate jersey list for 2018, though it remained in use as a Spring Training jersey and was worn by only a few players during the season as a pregame BP jersey.

Decidedly less ornate than the team’s last blue alternate from 1999–2000, this Dodger Blue Flex Base jersey features single-layer white twill for the front team script and back numbers and name. The front number is in red, like their other jerseys. White knit trim encircles the sleeve ends.

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020-2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

2021-2023 City Connect

The Dodgers are all about Dodger Blue, and their City Connect jerseys (and pants!) are no exception. These Nike Flex Base jerseys read “Los Dodgers” in white in the team’s familiar script, honoring their Latino fan base. Player name and back numbers are white, while the iconic red front numbers remain unchanged.

The left sleeve sports the team’s “LA” cap logo, with each sleeve end highlighted by a black spray-paint pattern—“a nod to the City’s street art culture and the murals which add color to buildings throughout Los Angeles,” according to the team.

The 2021 jersey bears the Lasorda and Sutton memorial patches on the right sleeve. The 2022 entry started with the right sleeve empty, but added the Vin Scully memorial on August 3 and the Maury Wills memorial on September 21.

In advance of the 2024 season, the team announced that they were retiring this design and replacing it with a new one, making them the first team to update a City Connect design.

After a seven-year absence from the MLB Style Guide as an official alternate for the Dodgers, their blue jerseys, most often seen in batting practice and Spring Training, return. As far as we know, these were not worn on-field for any games in 2024 and were used, once again, as a batting practice jersey and in Spring Training—despite their designation in the Style Guide.

Jersey below is a retail authentic, but the tag is from a team-issued jersey.

The Dodgers are the first MLB team to receive a second iteration of a City Connect jersey, which the MLB Style Guide lists as "City Connect 2.0"—yes, seriously. While the team's "1.0" version stuck close to their usual look with some color changes, the 2.0 goes way outside—looking nothing like what we typically associate with the Dodgers. Elements like player names below the truncated back numbers and a front number above the city name almost literally flip the traditional Dodgers look upside-down. What unites this set to the city is the story behind all of the individual elements, which were explained by the club as follows:

The front wordmark: The typeface is inspired by signage of the LA Memorial Coliseum, which served as the first home of the Dodgers in 1958. The contract and upward trajectory is intended to speak to the city's pursuit of the beyond.

The hashtag #ITFDB: "It's Time for Dodger Baseball" are the words said just before every Dodgers home game. It is also paying homage to the legendary Hall of Fame voice of the Dodgers, Vin Scully.

The mark: A mashup of the trademark LA interlocking logo and the swooping "D" of the logo script, it all combines to form the Dodgers' LAD team code.

The numbers: They are inspired by mid-century typefaces popular when the Dodgers moved to Los Angeles from Brooklyn.

The fabric: In perhaps the most unique part of the uniform, it focuses on the "galaxy of stars," which is rendered in the color palette of Dodger Stadium, hoping to represent the diversity in Los Angeles.

The colors: The Dodgers are known for their Dodger Blue, but the City Connect uniforms go with a different colorway -- Cobalt and Electric Blue -- with a hint of "Chili Red," which serves as a nod to the red numbers on the Dodgers' primary uniforms.

In other words, like a lot of other City Connect styles, it is a whole lot of little things thrown together.

These jerseys use perforated numbers. Carryover City Connect jerseys are not updated in 2025, despite the updates to the team's other jerseys for the 2025 season. The 2025 version has the Fernando Valenzuela memorial patch above the team patch.

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Notice that the Dodgers' front script still breaks awkwardly in the middle of the second letter "D" as was started in 2024. In 2024, the MLB Style Guide only noted that the Dodgers would change their back number style, and made no mention of player name lettering or front number. However, all lettering and numbering did get smaller in 2024. For 2025, the Dodgers do increase their lettering and number sizes, but the front numbers, while larger than in 2024, are not as big as they were in 2023. They are now 4 1/2" high vs. their earlier 4 3/4". The change is made to keep the numbers proportional to the smaller front script of the VPE jerseys. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. The 2025 version has the Fernando Valenzuela memorial patch above the team patch. The jersey has the new-for-2025 white Nike jock tag, which is used on a handful of jerseys around the league.

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB, and because the Dodgers have two road gray jerseys, the changes are applied to both. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. VPE’s placket remains narrow, so the “Los Angeles” lettering breaks in the same place as in 2024. For 2025, the Dodgers do increase their lettering and number sizes, but the front numbers, while larger than in 2024, are not as big as they were in 2023. They are now 4 1/2” high vs. their earlier 4 3/4”. The change is made to keep the numbers proportional to the smaller front script of the VPE jerseys. 2025 Alternate Home

The Dodgers blue alternate, used as a Spring Training and batting practice model, returns to the MLB Style Guide in 2025. Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1995-1998 Batting Practice/1999-2002 Home Batting Practice

While "Authentic"-labeled pullover and button-front BP jerseys were sold in stores during the 1980s and 1990s, the Dodgers were actually the last team to adopt and wear an official pre-game batting practice jersey — not until 1995!

This jersey is royal blue mesh fabric, with a red Dodgers-style number on the front and white Majestic Block numbers on the back. NOBs are always present on batting practice jerseys. Sleeve end trim is a knit braid sewn on top of the jersey fabric, not a knit sleeve end.

1999-2002 Road Batting Practice

Royal blue mesh, no number on front. In 1999, the main color of the front "LA" crest and the back numbers is shiny metallic silver. From 2000–2002, this is toned down and replaced with solid gray twill.Starting in 2000, jerseys include the MLB "Silhouetted Batter" patch on the back of the neck. The 1999 jerseys are plain without the patch.

The Dodger sleeve script patch is white/royal blue/gray. It is worn on the left sleeve from 1999–2000 and moved to the right sleeve from 2001–2002.

Back number is three-color—metallic silver/blue/white (1999) or gray/blue/white (2000–2002). Back name is one-color white throughout. No nameplates are used.

Blue tech fabric with shiny sleeve inserts. Front number is two-color—red/white. Back number is two-color—blue/white. Name on back is one-color white, no nameplate. Names should be 3½” tall. However, many were incorrectly lettered in 2003 only, with 3” names and inconsistently sized number outlines, to the team’s displeasure. NOB was eliminated for 2005–2006.

Like every other MLB team, the Dodgers adopt a new Cool Base batting practice jersey for 2007. Very sheer in construction, all lettering is a flock appliqué as shown in detail at right.

Side panels are pale gray. Player names and numbers are white/gray from 2007–2009.

In 2010, the front script and back numbers lose the gray outline and are now solid white.

2011-2013 Batting Practice

The 2011–2013 Dodgers are the only MLB team with numbers on the front of their BP jerseys. The large red front number is a visual signature of the Dodger uniform. To ensure the number would fit on the BP jersey—with its white side panel intruding—all game uniform numerals are shrunk ⅛" to 4⅞" tall from 2011 forward. (The Twins added front BP numbers in 2014.)

- For 2011, all of the batting practice jerseys in MLB that are changed to button-front designs from earlier pullovers.
- The front script remains plain white, as introduced in 2010. Side panels are solid white. Sleeves are fully blue and no longer have white underneath.
- Player names and numbers are used on back in Block style. Front numbers are in Dodger Block in red, all done in twill.

2014-2016 Batting Practice

The changes to the Dodgers' 2014 batting practice jersey are minor. Look for the addition of knit white/blue/white neck and sleeve opening trim. White side panels now extend beneath the sleeves and only halfway down the sides, instead of all the way down as they did in 2013.

All lettering is one-color white, except for bold red front numbers. Even though the side panels no longer interfere, the front numbers remain 4⅞" tall.

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for work-outs and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team.

The Dodgers use a design separate from their regular season standard set, reminiscent of their regular sea-son batting practice jerseys, as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. Front numbers are red. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "AZ" representing where the Dodgers spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with "2017" and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before. The Dodgers are one of the few teams with single-color back numbers anyway, so the league-wide change to single-color numbers did not matter to them at all. Except for the twill pattern and the sleeve patch, their 2017 Spring Training jerseys are indentical to 2016 versions.

The Dodgers again use a design that is sometimes referred to as their "alternate home" jersey, though it was only worn during Spring Training or occasionally for batting practice. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. Front numbers are red, as used in the regular season. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve—in the style of an Interstate highway sign—reading "2017" and "AZ," representing where the Dodgers spend Spring Training.

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional batting practice jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Dodgers jersey is Dodger Blue with white back and underarm gussets. The interlocking "LA" logo from their caps appears on the front left chest in white. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in white Block on the left sleeve.

Notably, the Dodgers rejected these jerseys for on-field use. According to team sources, they wore them briefly in 2017 before switching to an alternate Majestic pullover warmup shirt with small player numbers on the right chest for 2018.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design theme of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts, using twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns.

The Dodgers use a design separate from their regular-season standard set as their base. The name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. Front numbers are red, as is used in the regular season. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "AZ" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to plain twill.

The Dodgers use a design separate from their regular-season standard set as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring “2019” and “ARZ,” referencing their Spring Training home. Front logo, player names, and back numbers are white. Front numbers are red.

2020-2023 Spring Training

For 2020, Spring Training uniforms are simplified league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home. Lettering is now the same non-patterned twill as teams wear in the regular season.

From 2020–2023, the Dodgers use a design separate from their regular-season set, which also served as regular-season batting practice jerseys. These jerseys feature white name and back numbers and red front numbers. In 2020, the All-Star Game patch is sewn on the right sleeve. The 2021 version includes the Tommy Lasorda and Maury Wills memorial patches on the right sleeve.

Special Events Jerseys

Turn Back the Clock — or Not?

Through the end of the 2004 season, the Dodgers had not yet participated in a Turn Back the Clock game wearing old-time uniforms.

Why? It seems the O'Malley family ownership wanted nothing to remind anyone of the team's identity in Brooklyn; the break had been made, and the team was to be known only as the LOS ANGELES Dodgers. This mindset continued during the relatively short Murdoch ownership.

In one incident, the Dodgers played the Giants on national TV. The Giants wore throwback uniforms and asked the Dodgers to wear Turn Back the Clock "Brooklyn" road uniforms to commemorate Bobby Thomson's "Shot Heard 'Round the World." Retro-styled uniforms were even ordered from Mitchell & Ness, and it was all set to be a Turn Back the Clock day.

After belatedly becoming informed of this—and realizing the place of that dark day in Dodger history—the Dodgers' PR department nixed the whole thing and told the Giants there was no way the Dodgers would help celebrate that moment—even though it had occurred 40 years earlier.

2005 Turn Back the Clock to ???! Brooklyn Dodgers

Under new ownership in 2005, the Dodgers suddenly embraced Brooklyn and dove blindly into the past—creating Turn Back the Clock uniforms that would make any uniform purist cringe.

The April 15, 2005 game was intended to commemorate the 58th anniversary of Jackie Robinson's first Major League game in 1947. Yet during his playing years, the Dodgers never wore jerseys that said "Brooklyn" on the front, having dropped that wordmark two years before Robinson joined the team.

Further, the Brooklyn Dodgers never wore "Brooklyn" on a white home jersey. That design was used on gray road jerseys only, from 1939–1945.

In my opinion, the uniforms' polyester fabric just looked wrong with the old-fashioned Brooklyn script. The uniforms bear little resemblance to anything the team ever actually wore on the field.

The opposition for that game was the San Diego Padres, who wore their standard 2005 uniforms.

I would go so far as to say the goal of this event was to re-link the Dodgers with Brooklyn as a marketing exercise. That is certainly not a bad thing—but there is so much authentic history to draw on. Why contrive something?

2005 Turn Back the Clock to 1959

Turn Back the Clock Day in Chicago*, June 18, 2005, commemorated the 1959 World Series matchup—46 years prior—between the "Go-Go Sox" and the Los Angeles Dodgers. Pictures of the Dodgers are scarce for this event, and when I looked at the few photos available, I thought that the Dodgers simply had declined to participate in the Turn Back the Clock festivities. I noticed there were no player names on back, but dismissively recalled that the Dodgers ditched them for 2005 on all uniforms anyway. But before I turned the page and moved on, I realized that the Dodgers TBTC uniforms on this date looked nearly identical to the road uniforms that I had become accustomed to but introduced two years later for the 2007 season, but here simply minus the "LA" patch on the sleeve and a slight difference in trim.

Note that the wordmark lettering is completely unadorned—without outlines. In 2005, the Dodgers' road uniforms featured white outlines on the team script and on the numbers on back. The back numbers appear larger than the standard 8", which would be appropriate when there are no names on back—an omission already committed by the Dodgers on their everyday 2005–2006 uniforms.

Blue knit trim is used on the sleeve ends and on the placket, just as it was in 1959 (see inset).

2007 Turn Back the Clock to 1955 Brooklyn Dodgers

On Saturday, June 23, 2007, the Dodgers played the Devil Rays in an Interleague game honoring members of the 1955 Brooklyn Dodgers, including then-current Devil Rays coach Don Zimmer—a member of that 1955 team.

The Dodgers wore full flannel uniforms produced by Ebbets Field Flannels. However, the last uniform to feature the "Brooklyn" script on the front was worn in 1945. The team was aware of this but chose the jerseys to celebrate Brooklyn nonetheless.

2011 Dodgers' Nostalgia Uniform Contest

1911 Road Uniform
One hundred years ago, fine narrow pinstripes accentuated the uniform pants and the gray shirts, which featured a "cadet" collar and the BROOKLYN name displayed vertically in small capital letters down the button panel. Known as the "Superbas," the Brooklyn team played its second-to-last season in 1911 at Washington Park.

1931 Road Uniform
Among the many uniform designs of the 1930s, the 1931 Road Uniform was the only variety to sport a block capital "B" on the front of the jersey. The dominant trim color was blue with some accents of red.

1940s Road Alternate Uniform
With the advent of night baseball at Ebbets Field in the 1940s, this uniform style used a highly reflective satin fabric with the idea it would be more visible under the lights. The blue-colored uniform features the trim and DODGERS script in white.

Source: Los Angeles Dodgers

The Dodgers hosted a contest in February 2011 asking fans to pick a nostalgia uniform from the team's past to be worn during six mid-week home day games that season.

From Dodgers' Press Releases:

February 7: The uniforms to choose from:

1. The 1911 Brooklyn Dodgers road uniform featuring narrow pinstripes and the name "Brooklyn" running down the button panel.

2. The 1931 road uniform with a large capital "B" on the front of the jersey.

3. The 1940s era "satin" road uniform which is blue and white and features the word "Brooklyn" in script

February 25: After nearly 50,000 votes, the 1940s satin uniform edged out the 1911 Road option by less than 2,000 votes. Though the original uniform worn in the 1940s was made of a highly reflective satin fabric to make it more visible under the lights for night games, the 2011 throwback jerseys will be made of the same material and maintain the same feel as those worn by the Dodgers throughout the season. The jerseys will be available for purchase by fans at Dodger Stadium beginning on the first date they are worn, April 21, when the Dodgers welcome Atlanta to Chavez Ravine. That date marks the anniversary of the franchise's first victory, which also came against the Braves in 1890.

2011 Turn Back the Clock to 1944 Brooklyn Dodgers (Bobcat)

There were two manufacturers used to make the 1940s nostalgia uniforms worn in 2011. The first uniform set was made by Bobcat Athletic, a newer manufacturer at the time, and these were used in the first two games—April 21 vs. the Atlanta Braves and May 4 vs. the Chicago Cubs—both of whom also dressed in 1944 styles made by Bobcat.

The Bobcat uniforms used in the team's preseason promo shots (top right) are made of a smoother, more traditional double-knit fabric compared to the Majestic Cool Base ones used later in the season. The "Brooklyn" logo closely matches the original, and the numbers on the reverse are white twill McAuliffe font, as was used back in the day.

The 2011 Duke Snider #4 memorial patch appears on the right sleeve of all game-worn uniforms. Notice that there is no manufacturer logo on the left sleeve—Majestic—the official supplier to MLB—was the only manufacturer allowed to display its logo.

2011 Turn Back the Clock to 1944 Brooklyn Dodgers (Majestic)

Majestic made the Dodgers' nostalgia uniforms that were used for the final four 2011 throwback games.

These games were played against the Reds (June 15), Tigers (June 22), Phillies (August 10), and Padres (August 31). The Reds and Tigers participated in the Turn Back the Clock theme, while the Phillies and Padres wore their regular uniforms.

Majestic's uniforms are made of their Cool Base fabric and, on close examination, appear more textured than the smoother Bobcat Athletic versions. They use the same front scripts and rear player numbers in McAuliffe font, which is slightly different from the modern Red Sox version. Player tagging is sewn inside the back of the collar.

The Dodgers were at home on both May 27, 2013, and May 26, 2014, for Memorial Day. MLB had all teams wear camouflage-lettered jerseys, and both years the Dodgers wore these white jerseys with all lettering—including the sleeve logo patch—rendered in camo. While other teams retained their standard sleeve logo patch, the Dodgers' version was uniquely rendered in camouflage.

2015 Memorial Day

For the third year in a row, the Dodgers are home for Memorial Day, but for May 25, 2015, they correct issues from the previous two years. This version adds an extra layer to the Dodgers' traditionally single-layer twill, inserting a blue outline around the desert camo, making the jersey significantly more legible than its predecessors. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/white, replacing its standard red/white/blue color scheme.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue—regardless of what the team's normal color palette might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar.

The Dodgers wear their home white jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars. All lettering—including the front logo and both front and back numbers—is outlined in red. The Dodgers are one of four teams (with the Royals, Yankees, and Tigers) whose lettering goes from one layer to two for this special promotion. Player names appear in blue. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve. The left sleeve patch remains the same.

2016-2017 Mother's Day

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms for Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on the left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back-of-the-collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white.

The Dodgers wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo, player names, front and back numbers, and the team's "LA" sleeve patch all changed to pink. All jersey trim, normally blue, also becomes pink. Several other teams incorporated dark gray elements into their jerseys—both home and road—for this promotion, but the Dodgers' version sticks with the pink throughout. The style returned for 2017.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at the back of the neck is rendered in black and dark gold for all teams. The new league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Dodgers apply the camouflage trimmings to their “Los Angeles” alternate road jerseys for the game on May 30.

All lettering and numbering—front and back—is rendered in woodland camo, devoid of black outlines or black player names that other teams use. Without the outlines, the lettering is slightly harder to read on the gray jersey than on versions used by teams that included outlines. However, it remains more legible than the desert camo used in previous years. The Dodger blue interlocking “LA” sleeve patch and trim elements are also changed to single-color black.

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special light blue–trimmed uniforms for Father's Day, Sunday, June 19. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on the left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back-of-the-collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white.

The Dodgers wear their home white jerseys with the front logo lettering, player names, and front and back numbers all in light blue. The team's "LA" sleeve patch, typically Dodger blue, is also changed to light blue. Aside from the change from a red front number, these jerseys are very similar to what the Dodgers wear at home on a regular basis.

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each jersey features a ChromaFlex rubberized MLB appliqué with a "stars and stripes" pattern sewn on the back of the neck.

The Dodgers are at home and wear their home jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill, and the Dodgers select the red twill version with blue outlines for their front lettering and for their front and back numbers, with player names in blue. The Dodgers are one of only three teams (with the Padres and Royals) to have additional layers of twill added to their typically single-layer jerseys. Several other teams, by contrast, simplify their multi-layer designs to two-color. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. The Dodger blue interlocking "LA" sleeve patch is also changed to a darker shade of blue.

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green throughout the Dodgers version of this jersey. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve. The Dodgers apply this style to their home white jerseys worn May 27–28, 2017, and May 26–28, 2018.

A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Dodgers apply this style to their “Los Angeles” road gray jerseys as worn on May 29, 2017.

Light blue–trimmed Father's Day jerseys return for the Dodgers on Sunday, June 18, 2017, at Cincinnati. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys feature the standard front left tail Majestic tag, along with set tagging at the inside bottom of the placket. Returning as well are the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon glued on the left chest, the light blue Majestic embroidered sleeve logo, and the dark royal blue/light blue/white back collar ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter patch.

The Dodgers wear their "Los Angeles" road gray jersey with all front and back lettering and numbers in light blue. The team's "LA" sleeve logo, typically Dodger blue, is also changed to light blue. Other teams in MLB also wore Father's Day jerseys the prior day, Saturday, June 17, 2017, but on that day, the Dodgers were playing the Reds, who wore their regular home whites along with a patch commemorating the dedication of a Pete Rose statue. As a result, the visiting Dodgers wore their standard road gray jerseys bearing the "Los Angeles" script instead.

2017 Independence Day (Road)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the new twill–appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck.

On July 1–2, 2017, the Dodgers wear their "Los Angeles" road gray jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. The team's "LA" logo on the left sleeve, normally Dodger Blue, is here rendered in navy twill. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team--standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017, and August 24–26, 2018, the Dodgers wear jerseys with royal blue bodies and powder blue sleeves with white nicknames and powder blue numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide bright blue/white/bright blue trim. The front features their home jersey script, here rendered in white lightweight twill.

2018 Independence Day

The 2018 Independence Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017, featuring printed twill with a pattern of stars and stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the lettering—but the Dodgers modify their 2017 version by removing the red trim from the blue patterned twill.

The jerseys themselves are Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging, and a ChromaFlex rubberized “stars and stripes” pattern MLB appliqué patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 24, 2018, the Dodgers wear their home white jerseys with the blue patterned twill for all front and back lettering. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. The team’s “LA” logo on the left sleeve, normally Dodger blue, is instead rendered in navy twill for this game.

2019 Turn Back the Clock to 1947 Brooklyn Dodgers

For the casual fan, this is a “blink-and-you’ll-miss-it” change to the Dodgers’ home uniform for April 15, Jackie Robinson Day. This subtle throwback is intended to replicate the Brooklyn Dodgers’ 1947 home set, which is clearly much the same as the Dodgers’ current uniform. The wordmark is slightly different—most noticeable in the script “G”—and the back number is 1947 style, much bolder than the team wears now. The jersey sleeves are also cut and attached differently. Notice the different sleeve tailoring in the photo below right.

Of course, there is no name on back, as names are absent from every team’s jersey on April 15. For the 2019 entry, the league-wide “42” patch to honor Robinson and the MLB150 patch reside on the right sleeve, while the Dodgers also add their “NEWK” memorial patch in memory of Don Newcombe, replacing the usual “LA” sleeve logo, which did not appear in 1947.

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Dodgers wear a white version of their home jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in white/gray with gray nickname on back.

2021 World Series “Gold Program”

Like many teams before them, the Dodgers boasted gold-trimmed jerseys for a few games in 2021 to celebrate their 2020 World Series championship—specifically the opening home games on April 9–11, and again for their first game with full post-COVID attendance capacity on June 15 (dubbed “Reopening Day”). Based on their normal home jerseys, these “Gold Program” jerseys (as Nike calls them) add a layer of gold metallic outline to all front and back lettering. The effect is very subtle—modest, almost—and is very difficult to see on the field.

What was obvious were the sleeve adornments: the left sleeve features an embroidered Roman numeral “VII” above a blue star to represent the team’s total number of World Series titles—a detail also seen on the Nationals’ jerseys the year prior. The right sleeve carries a special World Series Champions patch, with the two season-long memorial patches for Tommy Lasorda and Don Sutton placed side-by-side above the champions patch.

2022 Turn Back the Clock to 1955 Brooklyn Dodgers

Steve Kraljic collection

On August 13, 2022, the Dodgers visit the Royals for a “Salute to the Negro Leagues” game. While the Royals wore Negro League throwbacks, the Dodgers chose 1955 Brooklyn Dodgers road jerseys to honor Jackie Robinson 75 years after he broke into Major League Baseball. The front of the gray Nike Flex Base jerseys was very slightly different from the Dodgers’ current set—subtle enough that a casual fan might not notice. The back was easier to spot, with much bolder numbers and no player names on back.

These jerseys also featured a Vin Scully memorial patch on the right sleeve—applied as adhesive rather than sewn—and many players struggled to keep them affixed during the game..

2025 World Series “Gold Program”

Three years after they last celebrated a World Series victory with Gold Program jerseys (as Nike calls them), the Dodgers introduce a new style in 2025. This version essentially reverses the colors of the 2021 entry, using gold twill as the primary layer and outlining it in what would normally be Dodgers blue or red (for the front number). The result is far bolder than the previous version. The MLB logo on the back of the neck also appears in a special gold version.

One sleeve bears the special World Series Champs patch as well as the Fernando Valenzuela memorial, while the other carries the sponsor patch. Patch placement varies depending on the handedness of each player. Note that this jersey also uses Nike’s new-for-2025 white jock tag, seen at right. Only a handful of jerseys across the league adopt this new tag in 2025.

Prototypes and Oddballs

1971-1972 Prototype Home

Stephen Kraljic Collection

Though Rawlings had made road jerseys for the Dodgers during their late-flannel and early–double-knit era, they had not been able to crack Goodman and Sons' monopoly on manufacturing the team's classic home jerseys. These two samples (and yes, they are different—note the differences in stitching patterns between the sample and Rawlings tags) appear to be their attempt to gain that business when the team transitioned to the new uniform material in 1972.

Aside from the base jersey color, it mirrors the design Rawlings used for the team's road set in that era, including the bolder "Dodgers" script and longer underscore compared to what Goodman used. The sample tag in the neck is a giveaway of this jersey's intended purpose and is similar to other Rawlings samples of that time period. Both examples are #19, which was worn by former Dodgers player and coach Jim Gilliam.

1970s “Coach’s” Spring Training?

- The Dodgers have sometimes used jerseys in Spring Training that feature letters of the alphabet on the front instead of player numbers. This example from the double knit era was found on eBay.
- The seller said that the “C” on the front stood for “Coach”, and that the Goodman and Sons mesh jersey had been issued to Roy Hartsfield a long time Dodgers coach.
- Notice the different Dodgers’ script on the shirt. While the numbers and the “C” appear to be twill, it is possible that the team script is screened on.
- This garment sold for the princely sum of $29 at the end of the auction.

Pre-1992 Prototype Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck?

Our Dodgers contact tells us that he does not remember this jersey, and suggested that someone may have made it at home using the version of the script that was used on Starter jackets, noting that the two-tone blue trim would never have been an option for the team. Since it is already in the “oddball” category, I’ll not remove it completely, in hopes that I may find another one, or that someone else may know something about this item.

- Majestic made this “Gamewarmer” line of pullover zip-neck batting practice jerseys with slash pockets (or sometimes faux pockets) and distributed them to MLB teams. This one is made of mesh fabric.
- Majestic once offered this alternate style of batting practice jersey to every MLB team during the mid 1980s through the mid 1990s, and some teams (like the White Sox) used them frequently. Many teams issued them as an alternate, or perhaps at individual players’ request, but a few teams (like the Phillies and Yankees) did not use them at all. The Dodgers so far as we know did not use these at all, and in fact as highlighted in the batting practice jersey section, the Dodgers were the last team in the majors to issue batting practice jerseys of any kind, in 1995.
- The front script is interesting, as it is unlike any other we have seen. The letters lean at different angles, and the tail under the word is very short. It is certainly not team spec. Also interesting the use of two shades of blue on the trim, when the Dodgers do not use light blue as a team color.

1992-1993 Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

Compared to the one of the prior page, this Majestic Gamewarmer zip-neck jersey uses the team's standard wordmark on the front. It is made of a lightweight solid fabric, not mesh, and has simpler knit blue and white neck and sleeve end trim.

This particular jersey appears to be a manufacturer's sample, as it bears a showy promotional "Diamond Collection" patch on its sleeve in the 1992 style that we have seen sewn on what we think are samples of this style jersey just a couple of times.

Early 1990s Custom Batting Practice/ 1993 Tour of Asia Mesh Jerseys

In prior editions, we reported that the Dodgers were the last team in MLB to issue batting practice jerseys to their players, in 1995—lagging more than a decade behind the rest of the league. We stand by that claim, even though bright blue retail-sale Dodgers batting practice–style mesh jerseys were sold by Majestic and Russell, with manufacturer tagging dating them to around 1992.

According to our sources in the Dodgers clubhouse, several players who came to the team from elsewhere were unhappy about the absence of lightweight warmups and having to wear their full-weight game jerseys during practice. Our inside source recalls that Darryl Strawberry (1991–1993) and Brett Butler (1991–1994) were two players who asked for—and received—mesh warmup jerseys, custom-made for them in white mesh for home games and gray mesh for road games.

With this explanation, the photos we've had in our archives now make sense.

On the prior and next pages there are two road versions of these gray mesh jerseys from private collections, not surprisingly carrying the names and numbers of Butler and Strawberry. The Majestic collar tags are indeed the 1992-only style with the red “Major League Baseball” written under the Diamond Collection logo.

They both have the proper Majestic tail tag and sewn-in sleeve logo for a MLB-spec jersey. Retail sale jerseys from that era had a different, heat-pressed sleeve logo.

Additionally, while searching for photos of the Dodgers’ postseason 1993 Goodwill Tour of Asia, we came across a couple of photos that show the players wearing mesh game uniforms that they were apparently issued to wear there. Not surprising, as in Taiwan and Japan teams routinely wear mesh game jerseys because of the humid, tropical climate.

This photo gives us a glimpse of the 1993 Dodgers Friendship Tour of Asia patch, as well as a snippet of the “IKE” patch on the other sleeve.

Pre-1995 Batting Practice (Retail Only)

Bill Henderson Collection

Pullover Dodger mesh jerseys with Authentic tagging are sometimes seen, but the Dodgers MLB club did not officially wear this style, either in Spring Training games or in warm up activity before regular season games as other MLB teams did. Our Dodgers insiders tell us that in 1995, the team was the last in the majors to adopt an official batting practice jersey, and these were the button fronts shown several pages prior.

These may have been Spring Training warmups, retail sale examples or refugees from the minors. The one at left has Majestic tags, center has Russell Diamond Collection tags, the one at right is made by Rawlings.

1996-1997 Oddball McDonald's Batting Practice

This jersey is something of a mystery. Based on tagging, it appears to be a Dodgers BP jersey dating from 1996–1997. The embroidered Majestic logo on the sleeve and the size 42 suggest it is team-issued, as that size was not commonly available at retail. However, there is a McDonald's patch sewn to the right sleeve—something the Dodgers never used, and something that would not have been permitted in this era.

The jersey has a signature on the front, but after extensive searching, we could not match it to any Dodger who wore #10—or, in fact, to any Dodger on their all-time roster of players or coaches.

We also considered that this may have come from some sort of celebrity game. The Dodgers have hosted the annual "Hollywood Stars Night" softball game for decades, but this jersey does not match any worn during that time.

It is also possible that this jersey is related to a Dodgers minor league team, but we have had no luck finding a match thus far.

For now, all we know is that this item exists—and it raises more questions than it answers. Any info on this one would be appreciated!

1998 'Think Blue' Promotion

In 1998, the Dodgers staged a "Think Blue" team spirit promotional from June 24–28 where they affixed a patch to the sleeve of the mesh BP jersey made mention of the fact that they were wearing blue jerseys Team management liked the look, and ordered blue alternate jerseys for the team to wear occasionally at home in the 1999 season. That story is on an earlier page in this chapter. The Dodgers confirm that a new set of jerseys with the "Think Blue" patch was made for this series, the set was auctioned off afterwards, and the "Think Blue" patch never appeared on a jersey after that.

1999 Prototype Road (Russell)

In 1999, the Dodgers were making some changes to their graphics and uniforms, and they considered this prototype "faux vest" jersey with blue sleeves and placket knit trim for their road uniform. This jersey came very, very close to on-field use. The official MLB style guide of 1999 (published in August 1998) shows this jersey as the team's approved road uniform. Dodgers' art director Ross Yoshida confirms that they had even reached the stage of making some for retail sale when management pulled the plug on the idea. So, while the team never wore this design, a surviving example is pictured above, with the typical "Player #5" lettering that is often found on team-issued prototype jerseys, those submitted to the team for their consideration.

To go along with our discovery, found on eBay, a "Custom Kevin Brown Dodgers Christmas Tree Ornament," made from a 1999 Kenner Starting Lineup figure, where he is wearing the exact jersey style pictured at the top. Notice the wild side stripes on the pants, not reflected in the MLB Style Guide renderings. Brown was the hot off-season signing for the Dodgers prior to 1999, so the timing for this is just right. At $2.99 it found no takers.

1999 Protoype Road (AIS)

Bill Henderson Collection

It is unsurprising that AIS may have supplied this design prototype for the team's consideration at the time the Dodgers were exploring changes to their road uniforms. Made by AIS, this sample features ornate outlining and 3D drop-shadowing, and contrasting raglan sleeves (compared to the set-in sleeves of the Russell-made prototype on the previous page). 1999 is our educated guess for its date of creation; the black AIS tag on this jersey was last used in 1999.

2000 Alternate - Phantom

After the alternate blue jerseys were used for just a week in 1999, it seems the team expected the event to repeat in 2000—but for some reason that we do not know, it did not.

What seems clear is that a complete set of player-use jerseys was sewn up for 2000. I say this because I have seen jerseys for all sorts of players, famous and not, and some, like the example at the top of this page, feature custom player tailoring. But these were never worn on the field.

These jerseys differ from the 1999 version in several ways: They are made by Rawlings and feature the Rawlings logo embroidered on the left sleeve, where the Russell logo had previously appeared on the right. The LA sleeve patch also moved to the left sleeve, leaving the right sleeve plain. Finally, as with all on-field jerseys in 2000, the MLB silhouetted batter logo patch was added and sewn to the center of the back collar.

Following Dodger team-issue practice, the Rawlings tagging, along with the year and set tag, is hidden inside the back tail. While these jerseys turn up occasionally and are often listed as “game worn,” they were never actually worn—or, so far as we know, even player-issued.

The blue alternate jersey remained in the official MLB Style Guide as a legitimate choice for the team to use through the 2006 season, but we have no evidence that any were actually made for the team after 2000, though retail-tagged Rawlings versions occasionally appear for sale. At any rate, Rawlings’ final year as supplier of Dodgers Authentics was 2002, and we have never seen a Majestic version of this jersey. I think it is safe to say that none of these appear to have been made after 2002..

Left: a retail authentic version of the blue jersey, like most of those in circulation. Note the collar size tag and the Rawlings “Authentic Collection” tag sewn to the outside tail instead of inside like on team-prepared jerseys.

2009 Turn Back the Clock to 1959 (not!)

Billed as a “Turn Back the Clock” to the 1959 World Series, the White Sox welcomed the Dodgers by wearing replicas of their 1959 uniforms. They also advertised that the Dodgers would wear replicas of their 1959 uniforms.

But the Dodgers wore their regular road uniforms, which were nearly identical to the 1959 versions from 50 years earlier. There are only two differences between the 2009 and 1959 Dodger jerseys: the 1959 road jerseys had thin blue knit trim on the placket, while the 2009 versions did not—and the 2009 road jerseys featured player names on the back, which were not present in 1959.

Original 1959 —not much differ-ence.

May 22, 2002 – Serial Offenders: The Dodgers visited Milwaukee for a Turn Back the Clock game vs. the Brewers (who that night dressed as the 1955 Milwaukee Braves). The Brewers’ press release said the Dodgers would participate by wearing 1955 uniforms, but photos of the event do not bear that out, as the Dodgers clearly wore their standard road uniforms.

2011-2013 Road Batting Practice (Retail Only)

This alternate Dodgers BP jersey carries the team's secondary logo on the left chest, similar to the 1999–2002 road BP jersey.

It is not listed in the official MLB Style Guide as a uniform option for the team, even though it carries Majestic "Authentic Collection" tags on the front tail. We have no record of the team wearing these.

Perhaps the Dodgers considered this style for Spring Training use but ultimately decided against it—or perhaps it was always intended as a retail-only item.

In any case, we have seen very few of them offered for sale.

2012 Test Flex Base

This Los Angeles Dodgers jersey is a Flex Base test issue made for pitcher Clayton Kershaw to use, four years before all MLB teams adopted the Flex Base template. It appears not to have been worn during a game; however, we have seen examples of these test jerseys worn during Spring Training 2012 by other teams. Majestic says that it worked with more than 50 players to test the Flex Base jerseys, so it's likely that many such jerseys were produced.

The Flex Base test jersey is similar to the regular-issue jersey in many ways. The main difference is that the numbers and lettering are not tackle twill and sewn on—they are heat-pressed. Also, the back tail of the jersey has a thinner mesh fabric. The wash code tag inside the tail reads "063T."

There is a strip tag in the collar that reads "22 Kershaw 50 2012 Test A" and is stitched on. The 50th-anniversary Dodger Stadium patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

2014 Pregame Tribute to Don Zimmer

Fan favorite and baseball institution Don Zimmer capped off a 65-year career by spending his final 11 years in the game as a coach with the Tampa Bay Rays. Zimmer spent most of his playing career with the Dodgers.

In a pregame ceremony on June 7, 2014, both the Rays and the visiting Dodgers lined up wearing Brooklyn-script jerseys with Zimmer's number 23. The Rays wore white, while the Dodgers wore gray.

2018 Sample Mother's Day

MLB's league-wide celebration of Mother's Day in 2018 took a turn for the traditional. After two seasons of rendering every team's jersey twill and team patches in pink and gray, 2018 brought the return of simply using a pink ribbon patch on each team's standard jersey (it is likely the change was made based on the manufacturing complexities for Majestic, logistical difficulties for teams' clubhouse staff, and the fact that the jerseys were very unpopular at retail). It is a small change - a "correction" really - but this prototype jersey makes clear that any change in uniforms is a big deal to manufacturers and teams.

This jersey's pedigree as a sample is apparent in a few details. First, it is size 46, a common sample size, and the "0730" code on the back of the laundry tag indicates it is a team-issued jersey. Further, it carries interior tagging with the tell-tale sample coding "DOD-MD-HJ-D1-1-2018" indicating it is version 1 (D1-1) of a Dodgers (DOD) 2018 home jersey (HJ) for Mother's Day (MD). The Dodgers were, in fact, at home for Mother's Day in 2018, so it is likely that the home version of the jersey was selected as a test for that reason.

It seems odd, even unnecessary, to create a sample like this for something as small as the addition of a single patch. But since this particular initiative was a change from the prior year, it is likely that Majestic made these up as a "proof of concept," not only for their own production needs, but to show to teams for their review and approval. It is likely such samples were made for all MLB teams' jerseys, but so far, we have only seen two turn up, the other an example for the Red Sox.

2018 Sample Memorial Day

Harrison Katapodis/dormroomjerseys on eBay

As we have seen on a previous page, for the 2018 season at least, MLB and Majestic spared no expense creating samples of jerseys with even the slightest proposed change. Here, we have a sample of a Memorial Day jersey made up for the Dodgers, rendering all blue twill as olive green, and adding the 5-star bar patch to the right sleeve. This is identical to what the Dodgers wore for Memorial Day Weekend games at home in 2018, so the sample's mission was accomplished. But, the Dodgers also wore the exact same jersey for Memorial Day in 2017, rendering this sample overkill. But if that was the policy, at least they stuck to it.

Like the Mother's Day version, this jersey's pedigree as a sample is apparent in a few details. First, it is size 46, a common sample size, and the "0730" code on the back of the laundry tag indicates it is a team-issued jersey. Next, the use of "PLAYER" and "18" on back are typical sample elements, where "18" stands for the year in which the jersey is intended to be used. Further, it carries interior tagging with the tell-tale sample coding "DOD-MEMDAYY-HJ-D1-1-2018" indicating it is version 1 (D1-1) of a Dodgers (DOD) 2018 home jersey (HJ) for Memorial Day (MD).

The 2018 season seemed to be a high-water mark for "in-the-cloth" samples of jerseys for every occasion, as we have seen many other examples for other teams.

2020 Unused Roberto Clemente Day?

This one stumps us a bit - at first look, it is a normal Dodgers alternate road jersey (reading "Dodgers" rather than "Los Angeles" on front). Everything checks out except that there's no name on back, which this jersey should have. So what gives?

Our best guess is that this jersey was made up for Roberto Clemente Day in 2020, which was celebrated on September 9 that year. At that point, players born in Clemente's native Puerto Rico were permitted to wear #21 for Clemente Day. For the Dodgers in 2020, that was Edwin Ríos and Kiké Hernández. Both did, in fact, wear 21 that day, but with their own names on back, contrary to the jersey seen above.

A closer look at the clues does little to solve what this jersey is. Its front tagging has the standard "LD3B" code for a Nike Dodgers alternate road jersey, and the "0890" code on the wash tag is normal as well. Even the MLB authentication sticker's serial number, when checked in the database, just says this is a team issued road jersey #21, not noting the lack of a name on back. There are no other signs of typical prototype or sample jerseys evident from the tagging.

It is possible that this jersey was made up under the belief that eligible players would wear "21" with no name on back for Clemente Day, like the Pirates did for the first time in 2020. Apparently, the plan for all Pirates to do so only started in late July that year, which required some scrambling to make happen, and that has long been the practice for when all players wear "42" for Jackie Robinson Day.

The Dodgers used an inventory number on their jersey tagging at this time, with "136" shown on this jersey. Assuming these numbers are sequential throughout the season, it would make this jersey one of the earlier ones made for the team, which means it may have been an early preview, if not a typically tagged sample.

Of course, it may have just been an accident. Dodgers pitcher Walker Buehler wore #21 in 2020, and wore a size 42, so it could have been a sewing error, too. Of note, in 2020 Ríos typically wore size 48 while Hernández wore size 42, so if this was a Clemente Day jersey, this one was probably intended for Hernández.

If anyone has any other info on this one, we'd love to hear!

2021: Nike “Reks” a Dodger Prospect’s Jersey

Spring Training is a time where everyone is getting back into the swing of the season. Pitchers are building up for long outings, hitters are getting their timing back, and fielders are practicing their relays and double-play combinations. But on March 3, 2021, Nike still seemed to be in off-season mode. In a spring game against the Reds, Dodgers prospect Zach Reks came to the plate with part of his jersey logo’s underline missing. It is impossible to know if it just fell off, or if he was issued it that way (other images from that preseason show him with the proper underscore). Either way, Reks went 0-2, and the game ended in a 4-4 tie...a perfect Spring Training score.

2024: Freddie “Patch-Free”-man

Dodgers star Freddie Freeman went 2-for-4 with an RBI in the team’s 4–2 win over the Twins on April 8, 2024. You could say he had a good day—but his jersey wasn’t quite as game-ready.

Freddie’s alternate road jersey lacked both the “LA” patch and the team’s sponsor patch. One missing patch is understandable—it happens. But how a jersey leaves the factory with two missing patches is beyond us.

Nike and Fanatics had plenty of quality control issues—especially with gray jerseys—in 2024. But this wasn’t one we were expecting.

1993 Postseason Friendship Series - Japan and Taiwan

October 29 - November 3, 1993, the Dodgers toured both Japan and Taiwan on a goodwill visit and played exhibition games. There were two versions of the patch, each with the flag of the respective country the Dodgers visited. They appear to have been applied to the jersey sleeves with Velcro, and switched out between countries. (Notice the Velcro strips in the photos shown here.) These patches, designed by Todd Radom, were worn on the left sleeve of team uniforms during the trip.

In 1999, after fan voting to name the greatest Dodgers of the past, artist Paul Rogers was commissioned to create a series of paintings for the outfield walls in Dodger Stadium. The Dodgers created a group of patches called "Dodger Heroes." Each player and coach could choose the one he wanted on his uniform sleeve (see next page). Here are photos of the complete set, as issued. There were 23 patches in the set. (Note: The Dodgers sold very limited quantities of these patches to the public in 1999, a few as complete sets. However, Sandy Koufax refused to license his image, so probably fewer than a dozen Koufax patches exist anywhere (you read it here).

2023-2025 Dodgers Advertising Patches

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Dodgers did not have an ad patch in 2023, but before the 2024 season, they struck a sponsor patch deal with Guggenheim Baseball Management, the Dodgers' own owner. The patches first appeared in Spring Training 2024.

The patch is a blue diamond shape with a thin white outline, and the Guggenheim logo in white on all of the team's uniforms.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team's typical sleeve patch takes residence on the opposite sleeve.

In 2023, the Dodgers had not yet made a deal with a jersey patch sponsor. The team's jerseys used for pre-season photos lacked the "LA" logo on the left sleeve, leading many to believe an ad deal was imminent. However, the logo was back by opening day, and remained on the left sleeve of the home, both roads, and City Connect jerseys throughout 2023.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Walter Alston 1973 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: July 27, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0727J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Home white, Goodman and Sons six-button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #24 Hall of Fame manager Walter Alston. Buttons are the ivory pearl 2-hole style often used by Goodman. Size 46 is consistent with other jerseys worn by Alston. Goodman was the exclusive provider of home jerseys to the Dodgers in 1973, only their second year in double knits. Notably, the 1973 lettering is in tackle twill, not the matte-finish and stretchy Dodger Twill that they team would soon switch to. "Dodgers" scripted on front with underline in Royal Blue, bold #24 below in red. On back the number 24 in the same bold font and in blue twill. Name on back "ALSTON" arched above in Goodman's own block style font. The inside of the placket is lined with linen for comfort.

Alston served as Dodgers' manager in both Brooklyn and Los Angeles from 1954-1976, a span of 22 years. From Wikipedia: "As a major league manager, Alston led Dodger teams to seven National League (NL) pennants and four world championships… Alston retired with more than 2,000 career wins and managed NL All-Star teams to seven victories. He was selected as Manager of the Year six times." Alston was elected to the National Baseball Hall of Fame in 1983. His number 24 has been retired by the Dodgers.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Goodman and Sons rectangular tag is sewn in the back of the collar in the correct style for 1973, noting the size as 46. In 1973, local manufacturer Goodman was the exclusive supplier of team home uniforms, while Rawlings supplied the road ones. The jersey is tagged on the lower outside of the left front tail, machine embroidered in cursive script, "Set A 1973", This tagging matches exemplars.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in overall excellent condition and shows signs of use and washing with softening of the fabric, and being the jersey of a non-playing owner, it is remarkably and appropriately clean and white. A light table evaluation reveals that the sewn elements are all original. There is a small round dark brownish- red stain on the lower back tail about half the diameter of a dime. There are a couple of other tiny spot stains above the name on back This jersey clearly escaped use in the minor leagues or in later years' spring training, which was the fate of so many Dodger jerseys from this period.

Conclusion: This jersey is in excellent used condition, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. It has the proper tagging.It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by manager Walter Alston of the 1973 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Don Sutton 1977 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: May 12, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0512J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Home white, Goodman and Sons six-button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #20 Hall of Fame pitcher Don Sutton. Buttons are the small, ivory pearl 2-hole style often used by Goodman. Size 42 is consistent with other jerseys worn by Sutton during the first half of his career. Goodman was the exclusive provider of home jerseys to the Dodgers in 1972-1986. Tackle twill dark Royal Blue team script on both panels of the front, close examination and comparison to exemplars shows that it is script pattern used 1972-1978. bold #20 below in red. On back the number 20 in the same bold font and in blue twill. Name on back "SUTTON" steeply arched above in Goodman's own unique block style font. (Regarding player name on back: there is a small rectangular glue mark adjacent to the top of the first "T", as if the letter was at first incorrectly placed and then moved before sewing, leaving a spot of adhesive residue behind.) The inside of the placket is unlined, typical for Goodman jerseys post 1975. All lettering matches exemplars for Dodger Goodman home jerseys 1975-1978.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Goodman and Sons rectangular locker tag is sewn in the back of the collar in the correct style used 1975-1984, noting the size as 42. A small local manufacturer, Goodman was licensed to supply the team only, and not licensed to make or sell team uniforms to the public. Between 1972-1978, The Dodgers tagged their jerseys every year except 1977. There is no team tagging on the jersey, and that plus the style of the front wordmark script combined with the lack of any commemorative patches on the sleeves (or marks from their removal) makes it most likely that this jersey is from the 1977 season.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation reveals that the sewn elements are all original. This jersey is in overall excellent and lightly used condition, with some mild softening and very slight puckering of the twill lettering, but the nylon jersey body fabric has yellowed considerably from its original white color. There is a very minor, almost un-noticeable red color run below the front #20. It appears to have been stored folded as the yellowing is more pronounced on the surfaces that were likely exposed more to the air. This jersey clearly escaped use in the minor leagues or in later years' spring training, which was the fate of so many Dodger jerseys from this period.

Conclusion: This jersey is in excellent lightly used condition, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. It has the proper tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by pitcher Don Sutton of the 1977 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Hoyt Wilhelm Final Season 1972 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: July 25, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0725J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray, Rawlings six-button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #31 Hall of Fame pitcher Hoyt Wilhelm, from his final season in a 21 year career. Buttons are the gray pearl 2-hole style often used by Goodman. Size 42 is correct for Wilhelm, who wore this size throughout his later career. Rawlings was the exclusive provider of road jersey to the Dodgers in 1972, the team's first year in double knits. Notably, the 1972 lettering is in tackle twill, not the matte-finish and stretchy Dodger Twill that the team would switch to. "Dodgers" scripted on front with underline in Royal Blue, bold #31 below in red. On back the number 31 in the same bold font and in blue twill. Name on back has been removed. Visible on the light table are the faint outline of Wilhelm's last name, then the bolder outline shadow of the last name of pitcher Doug Rau. Wilhelm pitched in only 16 games in the 1972 season, his final appearance was on July 10, 1972 at Philadelphia, just weeks before his 44th birthday. He was released by the Dodgers on July 22, ending his MLB career. Pitcher Doug Rau was a September call-up for the Dodgers in his first MLB season, and he was re-issued Wilhelm's jersey with his name applied above the numbers. Rau's name was also subsequently removed. Wilhelm has signed the jersey on the front boldly below the numbers. I do not have a professional opinion on the authenticity of the autograph.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The new-for 1972 style of red rectangular Rawlings tag is stitched inside the back of the collar, showing the size as 42. It shows some light wear and remains tightly stitched. On the bottom of the left tail on the outside are the numerals "72" hand chain-stitched in Royal blue thread. A small flag tab like the kind typically found stitched under the edge of the locker tag is sewn stand-alone on the reverse of this spot, inside the bottom of the left tail near the edge of the bottom hem. It says SET 1 #8P 1972,

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in overall good to fair condition and shows signs of repeated use and washing with softening of the fabric, and detergent fading of the thread holding the lettering in place. Already mentioned are the ghosts of the two player names that are visible on the light table, but also visible is the outline of a nameplate that has been removed. While we must keep in mind that 1972 was the very first year for player names on back for Dodger uniforms, but the Dodgers were a team that did not believe in using nameplates for its players, In my opinion it is unlikely (but not impossible) that a plate was used on this jersey in any Dodgers MLB application. Additionally, the wear on this jersey is significantly more than the short 1972 combined uses by Wilhelm and Rau would have caused. This indicates to me that the jersey may have been sent to spring training or the minor leagues and used there with the name on back still present but covered up. A light table examination shows that the numbers are original without alteration. The thread holding on the back numbers is half missing, and the numbers are very loose at the time of this examination. Some glue marks remain from the removal of Rau's name. Beneath the number 3 on back are two approximately 1" long vertical symmetrical V shaped slashes in the fabric approximately 4 inches apart; they look like the result of a storage accident rather than game wear.

Conclusion: This jersey is in good to fair used condition, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. It has the proper tagging It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by both Hoyt Wilhelm and Doug Rau of the 1972 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Walter Alston 1972 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: October 14, 2021 Certification Number: 21-1014J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Home white, Goodman and Sons six-button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers originals worn by #24 Hall of Fame manager Walter Alston, now stripped of name on back and converted to #80 most likely for later spring training use. Buttons are the ivory pearl 2-hole style often used by Goodman. Size 46 is consistent with other jerseys worn by Alston. Goodman was the exclusive provider of home jerseys to the Dodgers in 1972, the team's first year in double knits. Notably, the 1972 lettering is correctly in tackle twill, not the later matte-finish and stretchy Dodger Twill. "Dodgers" scripted on front with underline in Royal Blue, in the lighter stroke used in the 1970s compared to later; bold #80 below in red. On back the number 80 in the same bold font and in blue twill. Name on back has been removed, but glue and ghost outlines of "ALSTON" arched above in Goodman's own block style font remain. The inside of the placket is lined with linen for player comfort.

Alston served as Dodgers' manager in both Brooklyn and Los Angeles from 1954-1976, a span of 22 years. From Wikipedia: *"As a major league manager, Alston led Dodger teams to seven National League (NL) pennants and four world championships… Alston retired with more than 2,000 career wins and managed NL All-Star teams to seven victories. Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Goodman and Sons rectangular tag is sewn in the back of the collar in the correct style for 1972, noting the size as 46. In the 1970s, local manufacturer Goodman was the exclusive supplier of team home uniforms, while Rawlings supplied the road ones. The jersey is tagged on the lower outside of the left front tail, machine embroidered in cursive script, "Set B 1972", This tagging matches exemplars.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in generally good condition and shows signs of heavy use and washing with graying and softening of the fabric. It is flecked with multiple dirt stains. A light table evaluation reveals the ghosts of the original numbers on both front and back. This jersey was most likely was used in later years' spring training based on its high number, which was the fate of so many Dodger jerseys from this period.

Conclusion: This jersey is in good used condition, and exhibits a team number change and removal of name on back, without contrivance. It has the proper tagging.It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by manager Walter Alston of the 1972 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Ron Perranoski 1972 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date:January 13, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0113J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray, Rawlings six-button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #16 Ron Perranoski. Size 44 is reasonable for the 6', 192 lb. player, who wore this size during his later career. Rawlings was the exclusive provider of road jersey to the Dodgers in 1972, the team's first year in double knits. Notably, the 1972 lettering is in tackle twill, not the matte-finish and stretchy Dodger Twill that the team would later switch to. "Dodgers" scripted on front with underline in Royal Blue, bold #16 below in red. On back the number 16 in the same bold font and in blue twill. As received, name on back has been removed and the player's name had been re-sewn onto a gray nameplate that as stitched over the spot. The MLB Dodgers did not use nameplates, and investigative removal of the plate revealed the clear ghost of Perranoski's name, but also the shredded and hastily repaired fabric that remained after the removal of another player's 5-letter name.

Restoration Performed: The jersey shows signs of several seasons of wear, likely from subsequent use in the minor leagues after 1972. The place where the NOB would have been was visibly puckered and with several holes hastily repaired. Investigating the situation, we learn that Perranoski, a former Dodger star pitcher 1961-67 was re-signed by the team in early August 1972 and assigned #16, likely being reissued the jersey of catcher Dick Dietz who had broken his wrist on July 30 and missed the rest of the season. My professional opinion is that Dietz's name was removed roughly from the jersey, (the scars match the letters) the resulting holes were roughly repaired, Perranoski's name was sewn on, and then stripped off after the season where the jersey went to the minor leagues and was used without a NOB. The nameplate that was on the jersey when received was likely an earlier attempt at restoration since the back of the jersey was so unsightly. I darned closed the holes on the back of the jersey, then reapplied the original name exactly over the ghosts, after first media blasting it to match the patina of the other lettering. I touched up the loose stitching on the back numbers only as necessary to keep them intact as they were nearly falling off.

As restored, this jersey is in overall fair to good condition and shows signs of repeated use and washing with softening of the fabric, and detergent fading of the thread holding the lettering in place. Already mentioned are the ghosts of the two player names that are visible on the light table. While we must keep in mind that 1972 was the very first year for player names on back for Dodger uniforms, but the Dodgers were a team that did not believe in using nameplates for its players. A light table examination shows that the numbers are original without alteration.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The new-for 1972 style of red rectangular Rawlings tag is stitched inside the back of the collar, showing the size as 42. It shows some light wear and remains tightly stitched. On the bottom of the left tail on the outside are the numerals "72" hand chain- stitched in Royal blue thread. A small flag tab like the kind typically found stitched under the edge of the locker tag is sewn stand-alone on the reverse of this spot, inside the bottom of the left tail near the edge of the bottom hem. It says SET 1 #8P 1972,

Conclusion: This jersey is in fair used condition, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. The name on back has been restored to original specifications. It has the proper tagging It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Ron Perranoski and likely earlier, Dick Dietz, of the 1972 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Rick Sutcliffe 1980 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: July 27, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0727J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Home white, WA Goodman and Sons, no size tag but chest measurement is 44, seven button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers jersey of #43, pitcher Rick Sutcliffe. Buttons are the solid white 2-hole style with embossed with "World Win" script used by Goodman seemingly in only 1980. Size 44 is a reasonable size for Sutcliffe to have worn at this point, early in his career. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in one-color royal blue Dodger-twill (not tackle twill, as is correct) The script is not outlined with white as many 1980 home jerseys are. On the back, player number 43 and "SUTCLIFFE"name on back arched above, direct sewn, in two color blue Dodger twill over white tackle twill and in the proper Goodman fonts with characteristic wide white outlines. Red tackle twill 43 on the front left chest. The 1980 All-Star Game patch is stitched to the left sleeve, and appears original and untouched. Sutcliffe appeared in 42 games for the 1980 Dodgers, He started 10 games and compiled a 3-9 record with a 5.56 ERA (Stats from Baseball Almanac).

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: 1980 Dodgers jersey had a unique one year (slightly larger than other years) Goodman/Mizuno branded tag, usually with a tiny flag tab pinched underneath noting the size. This one has no size tag. Typical of Dodgers jerseys of this period there is no team or set tagging on player jerseys. Goodman was not licensed to sell authentic jerseys to the public, and all that they made were used to supply the team.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey is in excellent condition showing very light use. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without alteration. The jersey is bright white and all the attaching thread is bright and tight. The sewn elements are all unpuckered indicating very little wash-wear. Goodman jerseys of the period are very heavy and extremely durable and well constructed.

Conclusion: This jersey is in excellent lightly used condition, and shows no alterations or contrivances. it is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Rick Sutcliffe of the 1980 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Charlie Hough circa-1980 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: July 26, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0726J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray, WA Goodman and Sons size 44 six button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #49 pitcher Charlie Hough. Buttons are the solid gray 2-hole style with embossment "World Win" used by Goodman seemingly in only 1980 (evidence from our exemplar library. It is possible that these were used in adjacent years, but we have no examples to prove this.) Size 44 is a reasonable size for Hough to have worn. 1" Bands of white/Royal blue/white knit trim are sewn on top of each sleeve end. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in two colors, royal blue Dodger-twill (not tackle twill, as is correct) outlined with a wide border white tackle twill. On the back, player number 49 and "HOUGH" name on back arched above, direct sewn, also in two color blue Dodger twill over white tackle twill and in the proper Goodman fonts with characteristic wide white outlines. Red tackle twill 49 on the front left chest. While there are no sleeve patches, there is ghost evidence of the removal of a round patch from the left sleeve that was probably the 1980 All-Star Game patch.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Typical of Dodgers jerseys of this period there is no team or set tagging on player jerseys. Goodman was not licensed to sell authentic jerseys to the public, and all that they made were used to supply the team. There are some irregularities with the neck tag: It appears the neck tag was replaced. 1980 Dodgers jersey had a unique one year (slightly larger) Goodman/Mizuno tag with small flag tabs underneath, and stitching evidence seems to show that this tag had been there and was removed. Instead, a white rectangular Goodman and Sons tag correct for 1977-1979 is stitched in the center of the back collar. There is some wear to the tag (more than the wear to the jersey it is attached to) and a small split in it near the bottom third at center. This neck tag was stitched there after the placket was sewn closed, so the stitching is visible from the outside back of the jersey. This is not typical of how tags were stitched at the shop. Original tags were sewn before the placket was sewn closed, so the attaching stitching is therefore normally invisible. My conclusion is the original tag was replaced with this one for some unknown reason. Finally, a small washing instructions tag is stitched into the inside placket near the bottom of the front tail. Extraneously, on the reverse of this tag is a small hologram sticker from an unknown source, it reads "100% Authentic Inc. 9424".

Wear & Repairs: Hough was traded away midway in the 1980 season after only 19 appearances. This jersey is in excellent condition and shows signs of light use and washing with softening of the fabric. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without alteration, aside from the notation about the neck tag and removal of a sleeve patch. Goodman jerseys are very heavy and extremely durable and well constructed.

Conclusion: This jersey is in excellent lightly used condition, Aside from the contrivance to the neck tag explained above and missing sleeve patch, it is all original and properly lettered. It displays appropriate use. Despite the inconsistency, it is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Charlie Hough of the 1980 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Mike Scioscia 1985-1986 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: June 13, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0613J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray, WA Goodman and Sons size 44 six button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #14 Mike Scioscia Buttons are the gray pearl 2-hole style often used by Goodman. Size 44 is reasonable for Scioscia, who wore this size early his career before switching to size 46 by 1988. A 1" band of white/Royal blue/white knit trim is sewn on top of each sleeve end. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in two colors, royal blue Dodger-twill (not tackle twill, as is correct) outlined with white tackle twill. Characteristic of Goodman jerseys, the wide white outlines appear hand trimmed rather than precisely die cut. The dark Royal Blue lettering is stitched with Navy Blue (original color) thread to the team's specifications. On the back, player number 14 and "SCIOSCIA" name on back arched above, direct sewn, also in two color blue Dodger twill over white tackle twill and in the proper Goodman fonts with wide slightly irregular hand-cut white outlines. Red 14 on the front left chest.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The white rectangular Goodman and Sons tag correct for use in 1985-1986 is stitched in the center of the back collar. Because it was properly stitched there before the placket was sewn closed, the stitching is invisible from the outside back of the jersey. Typical of Dodgers jerseys of the early and mid-1980s there is no team or set tagging on player jerseys. While surely a few samples were made for family and friends, Goodman was not licensed to market authentic jerseys to the public; the ones that they made were used to supply the team.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in good to very good condition yet shows good signs of repeated use and washing with softening of the fabric, fading of the sleeve end trim, and detergent fading of the thread holding all the lettering in place. There are a few dirt marks and scuffs on the jersey. There is notable puckering of the jersey fabric beneath the back numbers reflecting repeated washings in hot water and the uneven rate of shrinkage between the two types of fabrics. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without alteration.

Conclusion: This jersey is in good to very good used condition, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. It has the proper tagging and its original sleeve patch. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by catcher Mike Scioscia of the 1985-1986 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Bill Russell 1983 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: May 2, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0502J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray, WA Goodman and Sons size 42 six button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #18 Bill Russell. Buttons are the gray pearl 2-hole style often used by Goodman. Size 42 is the correct size for Russell, who wore this size throughout his career. 1" Bands of white/Royal blue/white knit trim are sewn on top of each sleeve end. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in two colors, royal blue Dodger-twill (not tackle twill, as is correct) outlined with white tackle twill. Characteristic of Goodman jerseys, the wide white outlines appear hand trimmed rather than precisely die cut. On the back, player number 18 and "RUSSELL" name on back arched above, direct sewn, also in two color blue Dodger twill over white tackle twill and in the proper Goodman fonts with wide white outlines. Red 18 on the front left chest. 1983 Dodgers 25th Anniversary (1958-1983) in Los Angeles patch is stitched on the left sleeve.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The white rectangular Goodman and Sons tag correct for 1983 is stitched in the center of the back collar. Because it was properly stitched there before the placket was sewn closed, the stitching is invisible from the outside back of the jersey. Typical of Dodgers jerseys of the early 1980s there is no team or set tagging on player jerseys. In 1983, Goodman was not licensed to sell authentic jerseys to the public, and all that they made were used to supply the team.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in very good condition yet shows good signs of repeated use and washing with softening of the fabric, and detergent fading of the thread holding the lettering in place. The sleeve end trim is unusually bright on this example,. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without alteration.

Conclusion: This jersey is in very good used condition, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. It has the proper tagging and its original sleeve patch. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Bill Russell of the 1983 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Steve Sax 1983 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: August 23, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0821J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray, WA Goodman and Sons, size 40 six button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #3, Steve Sax. Buttons are the gray pearl 2-hole style often used by Goodman. Sax wore size 40-42 jerseys throughout his early career, so this size is appropriate for him. 1" Bands of white/Royal blue/white knit trim are sewn on top of each sleeve end. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in two colors, royal blue Dodger-twill (not tackle twill, as is correct) outlined with white tackle twill. Characteristic of Goodman jerseys, the wide white outlines are not precise and appear hand trimmed rather than precisely die cut. On the back, player number 3 and "S. SAX" name on back arched above, direct sewn, also in two color blue Dodger twill over white tackle twill and in the proper Goodman fonts with wide white outlines. Red '3' on the front left chest. 1983 Dodgers 25th Anniversary (1958-1983) in Los Angeles patch is stitched on the left sleeve.

1983 was Steve Sax's second in the majors, and followed his standout 1982 NL Rookie of the Year-winning campaign. In 1983 Sax played in 155 games, batting .281with 175 hits.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The white rectangular Goodman and Sons tag correct for 1983 is stitched in the center of the back collar. Because it was properly stitched there before the placket was sewn closed, the stitching is invisible from the outside back of the jersey. Typical of Dodgers jerseys of the early 1980s there is no team or set tagging on player jerseys. In 1983, Goodman was not licensed to sell authentic jerseys to the public, and all that they made were used to supply the team.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in very good condition yet shows good signs of repeated use and washing with softening of the fabric, and bleach-fading of the thread holding the lettering in place. The sleeve end trim shows mild fading typical of these jerseys. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without alteration.

Conclusion: This jersey is in very good used condition, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. It has the proper tagging and its original sleeve patch. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Steve Sax of the 1983 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Orel Hershiser Los Angeles Dodgers 1992 Game Worn Autographed Jersey

Examination Date: May 1, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0501J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1992 Los Angeles Dodgers #55 Orel Hershiser six button white full weight knit jersey. Size 46 without special tailoring, as is correct for the player. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in dark royal blue Dodger-twill (not tackle twill, as appropriate). On the back, player number and "HERSHISER" name on back arched above, direct sewn, in two color blue Dodger twill over white tackle twill. Red 55 on the front left chest, notably placed lower and further to the center of the jersey than typical for Dodgers jerseys, but notably just like all other Hershiser examples in our archives. The Dodger Stadium 30th Anniversary 1962-1992 patch is stitched to the left sleeve. The jersey is autographed on the right front in blue Sharpie; I have no professional opinion on the autograph.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: As is appropriate for 1992, there is no Rawlings sleeve logo. With Russell assuming the official MLB contract for 1992, no other manufacturer could display their mark on an MLB jersey. The red Rawlings locker tag in the correct style for 1992 is sewn centered on the inside of the back tail. Pinch-sewn under the right side of the Rawlings tag is a white flag tab, printed with Set 1 1992. All aspects of the jersey lettering and tagging including placement, match exemplars from our reference library for 1992 Dodgers game jerseys, and media photos of the player in 1992.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in very good condition and shows signs of wash and wear. It has some light surface and ground-in dirt staining on the front and the tails. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without alteration. There are dirty wear-marks around the collar and small pulls evident on the fabric, the raised seams of the jersey are slightly dirt stained.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered, and has no contrivances. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits reasonable use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine issued to and worn by Orel Hershiser of the Los Angeles Dodgers during the 1992 season.

Mike Piazza 1993 (tagged 1992) Los Angeles Dodgers Home Game Jersey, "Rookie of the Year" Season

Examination Date: May 16, 2023 Certification Number: 23-05016J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1992-tagged Los Angeles Dodgers #31 Mike Piazza Rawlings six button white full weight white knit jersey. Size 46 with special tailoring noted and observed. (Tail is 33" long, typical is 32") "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in dark royal blue Dodger-twill (not tackle twill as is correct). The lettering is all sewn on with blue thread that is darker than the lettering, a specific requirement of the Dodgers to their manufacturers, so that as the thread faded in the wash it would not be lighter than the lettering itself. On the back, player number and "PIAZZA" name on back arched above, direct sewn, in two color blue Dodger twill over white tackle twill. Red 31 on the front left chest. While Piazza soon began wearing larger jerseys— he moved quickly to size 50 where he stayed for most of his career, his 1991-1992 minor league jerseys were 44s and other authenticated Dodgers jerseys of record from his pre-rookie season in 1992 were size 46.

Notably: In 1992 all season, the Dodgers wore a commemorative sleeve patch on the left sleeve- Dodger Stadium 35th Anniversary. This jersey does not have the patch nor is there any evidence of it having been there. There is, however scant evidence of the removal of a disk patch at the end of the left sleeve. In 1993 the Dodgers wore disk memorial patches at the end of both sleeves: #52 (for Tim Crews) on the left was worn all season, and #39/#53 on the right (for Roy Campanella and Don Drysdale) was added in early July. On this jersey there is no evidence of a patch having ever been on the right sleeve.

In 1993, Mike Piazza played in 112 games for the Dodgers, batting .346 with 32 home runs and was the 1993 Rookie of the Year in the National League. In his 16-year MLB career, he was a 12 time All-Star and 10 time Silver Slugger award winner. He was elected to the baseball Hall of Fame in 2016. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: No manufacturer sleeve tagging. 1992 was the first year that Russell owned the contract as official uniform supplier to MLB, and while teams were not obliged to change to Russell, those that used other makers had to wear jerseys with plain sleeves. The red Rawlings locker tag in the unique and correct 1992-1993 style is sewn centered on the inside of the back tail. Pinch-sewn under the right edge are two tags- a white rectangular satin tag with "1 Inch Extra Length" printed on it in blue, and a SET 2 1992 flag tab. All aspects of the jersey lettering, tagging and placement match exemplars from our reference library for 1992 (and 1993) Dodgers game jerseys.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in good condition and shows signs of repeated use and washing. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without alteration, aside from the removal of the sleeve memorial patch. There are small pulls evident throughout on the fabric, and there is ground in reddish dirt on the front of the jersey as well as chest-area fabric pilling that is typical of the abrasion from a catcher's chest protector. The lettering is slightly puckered, edge-softened and mildly frayed indicating use. The third button from the top is missing.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered, and has Piazza's customary special tailoring. While it is tagged for 1992, the ghosts of the sleeve patches indicate that it could only have been used in 1993 between April and early July. In all regards it matches exemplars for team issued Dodgers player jerseys. It exhibits use and wash wear, and aside from the removal of the sleeve patch appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, while it is offered without provenance, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine, and was team issued and worn by Mike Piazza of the 1993 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Mike Piazza 1995 Los Angeles Dodgers Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: May 15, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0515J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1995 Los Angeles Dodgers #31 Mike Piazza Russell six button white full weight gray road knit jersey. Size 50 without special tailoring noted but tailoring is present. Typically, Piazza game-worn Dodgers jerseys are marked with tags denoting his requests: 2" extra length, 1" extra sleeve length. This jersey measures 35" collar to tail; while standard length for Russell size 50 jerseys are usually 33 1/2". Its sleeves are standard 8 1/2" length. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in dark royal blue outlined with white, in Dodger-twill (not tackle twill as is correct for 1995). On the back, player number 31 and "PIAZZA" name on back arched above, direct sewn, in two color blue Dodger twill over white tackle twill. Red 31 on the front left chest. There are no sleeve patches, correct for 1995. 1" blue/white trim sewn at the end of the sleeves. The lettering is all sewn on with blue thread that is darker than the lettering, a specific requirement of the Dodgers to their manufacturers, so that as the thread faded in the wash it would not be lighter than the lettering itself.

In 1995, Mike Piazza played in 112 games for the Dodgers, batting .346 with 32 home runs. In his 16-year MLB career, he was a 12 time All-Star and 10 time Silver Slugger award winner. He was the 1993 Rookie of the Year in the National League. He was elected to the baseball Hall of Fame in 2016. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell "R" embroidered in blue onto the right sleeve end. The Russell Diamond Collection locker tag is sewn centered on the inside of the back tail, matching the location of exemplars. Directly above the Russell tag is a white rectangular mylar fabric tag with "95" computer printed on it. Pinched and sewn beneath the Russell tag is a single fabric flag tag: 100% polyester. All aspects of the jersey lettering and tagging including placement match exemplars from our reference library for 1995 Dodgers game jerseys. (I will note that my exemplar library has reliable examples of 1995 Dodgers jerseys with tags in this same style that say both "1995" and simply "95".) The tags show some wear and curling from hot water washing.

Wear & Repairs: A light table evaluation shows that this jersey is in very good condition and the stitching is all original and untampered with. The tagging is in the proper place for team-issued Dodgers jerseys. This jersey shows signs of light wear, mostly in the softening of the lettering edges and curling of the tags. There are some brown splatters on the top above the "g" in Dodgers, and the front right stomach area that could be from tobacco.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, and lettered. While it is not marked as such, it has Piazza's customary special extra-length tailoring. It matches exemplars for 1995 Dodgers player jerseys. It exhibits use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. While it is offered without provenance, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine, and was team issued and worn, made to the specifications of Mike Piazza of the 1995 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Raul Mondesi 1995 Dodgers Game Worn Road All-Star Jersey

Examination Date: November 4. 2020 Certification Number: 21-0306J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray, Russell size 48 six button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #43 Raul Mondesi. 1" Bands of knit sleeve end trim are sewn on top in white/royal blue/white. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in two colors, dark royal blue Dodger-twill (not tackle twill) outlined with white tackle twill. On the back, player number 43 and "MONDESI" name on back arched above, direct sewn, also in two color blue Dodger twill over white tackle twill. Red 43 on the front left chest. 1995 All Star Game patch is stitched on the right sleeve. (Mondesi played in the 1995 All Star Game.) The jersey is autographed near its right side seam on the front. (I do not have an opinion on the authenticity of the autograph.) Besides being an All-Star in 1995, Mondesi was NL Rookie of the Year in 1994 and was awarded a Gold Glove in 1995. Mondesi played in 139 games for the 1995 Dodgers, hitting .285 with 26 home runs.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell "R" embroidered in blue onto the right sleeve end. The Russell Diamond Collection locker tag is sewn centered on the inside of the back tail. Pinched and sewn beneath the Russell tag is a fabric flag tags that reads 100% polyester. While many 1995 team issued jerseys had a white mylar tag with the simple designation "95" computer printed on it, not all examples had one. This jersey is without the year tag. While this is not intended to represent a photo match, notably, the player name on back has lettering unusually spaced very closely together, and video from the 1995 All-Star Game shows that the jersey Mondesi was wearing has the same distinctive very tightly spaced NOB lettering.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in very good condition yet shows good signs of repeated use and washing with softening of the fabric, a few pulls in the jersey fabric and loose threads in the stitching. The blue color on the knit sleeve trim is bleached from laundering, common on these Dodgers jerseys. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without alteration. I would note that the All-Star sleeve patch is very crisp and bright white. It is my supposition that this is a jersey that Mondesi wore during the first half of the season that had the patch added to the sleeve and was worn in the All-Star Game. As the patch remains in place (it does not show signs of having been removed or replaced) we also might speculate he was issued a new jersey to wear for the second half of the season, without the patch.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good used condition, is all original and properly lettered without contrivance. It has team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Raul Mondesi of the 1995 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Sandy Koufax 1999 Los Angeles Dodgers Home (Coach's) Jersey

Examination Date: November 4. 2020 Certification Number:

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1999 Los Angeles Dodgers #32 Sandy Koufax (coach's) Russell six button white full weight knit jersey. Size 48 with special tailoring, 2" extra length, "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in two colors, dark royal blue tackle twill. On the back, player number and "KOUFAX" name on back arched above, direct sewn, also in two color dark Royal blue tackle twill over white tackle twill. Red 32 on the front left chest. Dodgers secondary logo 'LA" patch in blue/white/gray sewn t the right sleeve. 1999-only "Dodgers Heroes" patch sewn to the left sleeve. While Koufax himself was memorialized with one of this series of 23 patches, he chose catcher Roy Campanella for the patch on his own sleeve. Koufax has maintained a good relationship with the Dodgers appearing occasionally as a coach. (Wikipedia: In 1999, The Sporting News placed Koufax at number 26 on its list of "Baseball's 100 Greatest Players". That same year, he was named as one of the 30 players on the Major League Baseball All-Century Team. Although he rarely makes public appearances, he went to Turner Field in Atlanta for the introduction ceremony before Game 2 of the 1999 World Series).

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in very good condition and shows signs of use and multiple washings. A light table examination shows that all sewn elements are original without alteration.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits signs of use, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and issued to Sandy Koufax for use during the 1999 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Jim Leyritz #18 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn 2000 Road Jersey

Examination Date: October 13, 2022 Certification Number: 22-1013J05

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Gray size 46 6-button-front Los Angeles Dodgers road jersey of #18, infielder Jim Leyritz. "Los Angeles" scripted on front with underline in Dark Royal outlined with light gray and white. Blue soutache rings the placket and 1" from the sleeve ends. Royal blue buttons. Dodgers patch on the left sleeve in the same colors as the front wordmark. MLB silhouetted batter patch sewn to the back of the neck in blue/white/red.

Jim Leyritz (6' 0" 195 lbs) enjoyed an 11 year MLB career as an infielder and catcher with seven teams, from 1990-2000. He finished his career with the 2000 Dodgers where he appeared in 41 games as a spot starter and a pinch hitter, accumulating 155 at-bats hitting .209 with 2 home runs. In his whole career, he appeared in 903 games and compiled a .264 batting average, hitting 90 home runs.

Restoration Performed: The light table clearly reveals the former presence of Leyritz's name having been removed from the back. They matched the templates I have for the team's 2000-vintage lettering, and I reproduced them in the correct colors and stitched them in place precisely over the ghosts.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings circled "R" is embroidered into the end of the left sleeve in dark blue. The Authentic Collection label is stitched inside the left front tail, location matching team specifications. Nest to the Rawlings tag is a rectangle of knit fabric with the "X-2000" machine embroidered in blue into it, and then stitched to the jersey. This tag is representative of an "EXTRA" jersey prepared by Rawlings and supplied to the team at the season's start, probably with player numbers already pre-sewn on it, but without a player name. These extra jerseys were kept by the clubhouse staff to be prepared locally for players acquired mid season. In this case, Leyritz was traded from the Yankees to the Dodgers in June 2000, and surely this jersey was stitched for him from clubhouse stock when he arrived.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows wear commensurate with a season's use. Removing player names of departed personnel was common practice at that time to allow the jersey to be worn the follow season, or if needed in spring training.

Above, as received. The light table clearly shows the ghosts of the removed name on back, which was restored.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition. the front crest and the numbers front and back are all original, and the back is properly restored with name on back lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Jim Leyritz of the 2000 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Clayton Kershaw 2008 Rookie Year Los Angeles Dodgers Home Jersey

This letter will serve as the opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2008 year tagged Los Angeles Dodgers Majestic Cool Base size 50 (marked and measured) six-button home white jersey of #22 Clayton Kershaw, consistent with the size he has worn throughout his career. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on the front in dark Royal Blue. Player number 22 on the front in the correct Dodgers font in red. On the back, in single-color dark Royal Blue, player name "KERSHAW" arched above number "22". Twill blue LA team patch sewn on the left sleeve. The MLB Silhouetted Batter patch in red, white and blue is stitched on the back of the neck. The 2008 team 50th Anniversary patch is sewn on the right sleeve. All fonts, colors and placement are the correct style for the 2008 Los Angeles Dodgers. This jersey is offered without provenance.

2008 was Kershaw's rookie year, in which he started 21 games and went 5-5 with a 4.26 ERA. As of this writing, his entire 15-year career has been with the Dodgers. To date, he has been selected to the All-Star team nine times and has won the NL Cy Young Award three times and was the 2014 NL MVP. In 2011, he won the pitching Triple Crown and the NL Cy Young Award, becoming the youngest pitcher to accomplish either of these feats since Dwight Gooden in 1985. (Baseball Almanac)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Majestic Authentic Collection, with the Majestic CoolBase style heat-applied tag as used in 2008 is on the outside left tail. Majestic M logo is embroidered to the end of the left sleeve, and close examination reveals the hidden ® debossment in its center. A Cool Base flag tab is sewn into the outer side seam. Inside the side seam is a white fabric flag tag with the code 0063 printed on it, the code that is used for jerseys made by Majestic to team specification for on-field use. Sewn beneath the Majestic locker tag is a rectangle of Mylar fabric with the printed inscription, "PROPERTY OF THE LOS ANGELES DODGERS 2008". This tag matches exemplars, and notably in 2008 there was no additional team tagging used by the Dodgers. While the MLB Authentication Program was in operation in that year, its use was spotty and hologrammed/registered items were restricted to notable events like the World Series.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all lettering on this jersey is original and unaltered. It also shows signs of multiple wash/wear. There are some dirt splatters on back below the numbers. The inside tag shows curling consistent with multiple launderings.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, and lettered, matching team issue. It is properly sized, consistent with known exemplars. It has no alterations of any kind and shows use. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine as issued to Clayton Kershaw of the 2008 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Yasiel Puig 2014 Los Angeles Dodgers Home Jersey

Examination Date: January 22, 2020 Certification Number: 20-1104J16

This letter will serve as the opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2014 Los Angeles Dodgers Majestic Cool Base size 50 six-button home white jersey of #66 Yasiel Puig. (The size is reasonable for Puig who wears both size 48 and 50 jerseys) "Dodgers" scripted with underline on the front in dark Royal Blue. Player number 66 on the front in the correct Dodgers font in red. On the back, in single-color dark Royal Blue, player name "PUIG" arched above number "66". Twill blue LA team patch sewn on then left sleeve. The MLB Silhouetted Batter patch in red, white and blue is stitched to the back of the neck.

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: Majestic Authentic Collection, Majestic CoolBase style heat-applied tag as used in 2014 is on the outside left tail. A Cool Base flag tab is sewn into the outer side seam. Inside the side seam is a white fabric flag tag with the code 0630 printed on it, the code that is used for jerseys made by Majestic to team specification for on-field use. A Majestic team tag is pressed into the inside back of the neck, with QR code that reads: "#66 Puig 50 2014" also printed showing the size, 50. Scanning the code returns simply this text, and does not link it to any MLB database; there is neither a hologram nor registration number present indicating that this jersey been registered into the MLB Authentication Program.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all lettering on this jersey is original and unaltered. It also shows signs of light wash/wear.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered with one that would be team issued. It is consistent with known exemplars. It appears to have no alterations of any kind. It does not have any hologram registration showing that it was actually issued to or used by the player. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine 2014 team-issue specification and was created for potential use during the 2014 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Zack Greinke 2015 Los Angeles Dodgers Home Jersey

Examination Date: May 2, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0402J02

This letter will serve as the opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2015 Los Angeles Dodgers Majestic Cool Base size 48 six-button home white jersey of #21 pitcher Zack Greinke. The size matches other authenticated game worn same-period jerseys on file for the player. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on the front in dark Royal Blue. Player number 21 on the front in the correct Dodgers font in red. On the back, in single-color dark Royal Blue, player name "GREINKE" arched above number "21. Twill blue LA team patch sewn on then left sleeve. The MLB Silhouetted Batter patch in red, white and blue is stitched to the back of the neck. The jersey is autographed on the back numeral 2. While I have no professional opinion on the autograph's authenticity, a JSA serialized sticker is applied to the same numeral, #Q24307. I will note that there are six unclipped threads of significant length (about 1/2" each) on the player name on back that would be noticeable should a photo match exercise ever be undertaken on this garment.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Majestic Authentic Collection, CoolBase style heat-applied tag as used in 2015 is on the outside left tail. A Cool Base flag tab is sewn into the outer side seam. Inside the side seam is a white fabric flag tag with the code 0630 printed on it, the code that is used for jerseys made by Majestic to team specification for on-field use. A Majestic team tag is pressed onto the outer left front tail, with QR code that reads: "21 Greinke 48 2015". Scanning the code returns simply this text, and does not link it to any MLB database; there is neither a hologram nor serial number present indicating that this jersey been registered into the MLB Authentication Program. I will note that by 2015, the MLB game-used authentication program, while not universally used to tag every item, was used in most instances to mark game-used items. In 2015 the Dodgers, among most other clubs, made official team issued style jerseys available in the team store for fans to buy, sized and tailored specifically to the player they would have been issued to.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all lettering on this jersey is original and unaltered. It also shows signs of light wash/wear, as the tags inside are curled. One would assume that the washing occurred before the autograph was applied.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly sized, tagged, lettered, and numbered with one that would be team issued. It is consistent with known exemplars. It appears to have no alterations of any kind. It does not have any hologram registration showing that it was actually issued to or used by the player. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine 2015 team-issue specification and was created for potential use during the 2015 season.

Greg Maddux 2008 Final Season Los Angeles Dodgers Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: June 21, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0621J05

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2008 six-button gray Dodgers Majestic CoolBase size 46 road jersey. Dark blue soutache stitched 1/2" from the end of each sleeve. "Los Angeles" scripted in New York Blue across both front panels with underline. Size 46 is a reasonable size for Maddux to have worn in his final season; he wore size 46 jerseys in the final few years of his career. Player number 36 in red on the left front chest. 36 centered on the back; MADDUX is slightly arched above, both in New York Blue. Interlocked "LA" team logo is sewn in the same blue twill to the right sleeve. Though the MLB hologram/authentication system was in place at that time, this jersey carries no hologram or serial number. This is not unusual, as it seems that mostly only special-event jerseys were being regularly authenticated at that point in time, while some players had their own private arrangements to have a third-party authenticate their game-worn gear. The Dodgers' 50th Anniversary in Los Angeles patch is stitched to the right sleeve.

Maddux enjoyed a spectacular 23-season Hall of Fame career, mostly with the Cubs and Braves. Maddux is the only pitcher in MLB history to win at least 15 games for 17 straight seasons. In addition, he holds the record for most Gold Gloves with eighteen. 2008 was his final season, where he appeared in only 7 games and went 2-4. On September 27, 2008 in his final start of the season, he won his 355th game, moving him ahead of Roger Clemens into 8th place in all-time wins.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows signs of some wash and wear use. There are some loose threads and the tagging is curled/puckered and slightly faded.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good used condition, is properly lettered and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and to be worn by Greg Maddux of the 2008 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Cody Bellinger 2017 Los Angeles Dodgers Fathers Day Jersey

Examination Date: January 21, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J05

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2017 six-button gray Flex Base size 46 Fathers Day-weekend road jersey. Light blue soutache stitched 1/2" from the end of each sleeve. Los Angeles scripted across both front panels with underline. Size 48 is a reasonable size for Bellinger to wear. All lettering on the jersey is in one color, Columbia Blue. Player number 30 on the left front chest and on the center of the back. BELLINGER is arched above. Interlocked "LA" team logo is sewn in Columbia Blue twill to the right sleeve. Three color, blue/light blue/white small embroidered ribbon patch incorporating the MLB silhouetted batter for cancer awareness is stitched to the upper left front chest. There is a small MLB hologram tag JB384699 applied inside the tail, that links to a MLB.com authentication saying that this jersey was game worn by Bellinger. Jersey is autographed on both the front and back numbers "5". I have no opinion on the authenticity of the autographs. The jersey is accompanied by a 2021-dated Beckett letter of authenticity for the validity of the autographs.

Wear & Repairs: These jerseys were worn for a single game, Sunday June 18, 2017. While most other teams wore these special jerseys on Saturday as well, the Dodgers were playing the Reds that weekend, and the Reds wore special jerseys commemorating the career of Pete Rose on 6/17, so the Dodgers wore their regular road uniforms on that Saturday. The jersey is dirty and heavily stained with reddish-brown dirt indicating that it is almost certainly unwashed.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent used condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for Cody Bellinger of the 2017 Los Angeles Dodgers.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Ron Cey 1981 Los Angeles Dodgers Game Worn Home Jersey, World Series MVP Year

Examination Date: April 29, 2025 Certification Number: 25-0429J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Descriptions: As received, home white, WA Goodman and Sons, size 42 six button full-weight knit Los Angeles Dodgers of #10, third baseman Ron Cey. Cey wore size 42 jerseys throughout his career. No trim, buttons are the small white pearl 2-hole style often used by Goodman. "Dodgers" scripted with underline on front in royal blue Dodger-twill (not tackle twill, as is correct) with large red "10" on the left chest below in tackle twill. On back in the Goodman fonts is the player number 10 also in blue Dodger twill, over white tackle twill outlining it. Characteristic of Goodman jerseys, the wide white outlines are not precise and appear hand trimmed rather than precisely die cut. The colorful Los Angeles Bicentennial logo patch used in only 1981 is stitched on the left sleeve, it appears original and does not seem to have been removed or replaced. This jersey is made of a special thicker material that is quilted on the inside with a fine diamond pattern, we have been told this was typical of Goodman jerseys made when they were expected to be worn in colder weather, such as in early season road games or a post-season series. The white rectangular Goodman and Sons tag correct for 1983 is placed in the center of the back collar. Because it was properly stitched there before the placket was sewn closed, the stitching is invisible from the outside back of the jersey. Goodman was not licensed to sell authentic jerseys to the public, and all that they made were used to supply the team.

Player Notes: Ron Cey is best known for his time as a third baseman with the Los Angeles Dodgers. Nicknamed "The Penguin" for his distinctive running style, Cey played in Major League Baseball from 1971 to 1987. He spent the majority of his career with the Dodgers (1971–1982), where he was a key part of the team's success in the 1970s and early '80s, including winning the World Series in 1981. Cey was a six-time All-Star and known for his power-hitting and clutch performances. He later played for the Chicago Cubs (1983–1986) and briefly for the Oakland Athletics in 1987 before retiring.

In the 1981 MLB season, Ron Cey played a pivotal role for the Los Angeles Dodgers during a year disrupted by a players' strike. Despite the shortened schedule, Cey appeared in 85 regular-season games, posting a .288 batting average with 13 home runs and 50 RBIs. Cey's season was marred by injury when he suffered a broken arm after being hit by a pitch from Tom Griffin of the San Francisco Giants on Tom Beyers as a coach in the Dodgers farm system after his playing years were through. While he is wearing #10, this is not to suggest that the jersey is wearing in these photos are the same one in our evaluation.

September 9, sidelining him until the postseason. Upon his return, he contributed significantly in the National League Championship Series against the Montreal Expos, including an RBI double in Game 1. In the World Series against the New York Yankees, Cey excelled, batting .350 with one home run and six RBIs over six games. His outstanding performance earned him co-MVP honors alongside teammates Pedro Guerrero and Steve Yeager. (LA Dodger Talk, Wiktpedia, Baseball Almanac)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Goodman's usual manufacturer tag is stitched into the back of the neck, showing the size as 42. While Goodman did not usually team-tag Dodgers jerseys, 1981 jersey have unique tagging in the tail that identify them. Machine embroidered in a cursive font in blue onto a small rectangle of knit fabric was a set designation, Set A, B or C (we believe that A and B were regular season issues, while set C was a set made for use in the 1981 playoffs) Immediately to the left of the set tag was a small satin fabric square with "1981" printed on it in red. On this jersey, the satin square is missing but its outline marked by the shards of the original thread that once held it in place remain. Given the extreme wear to the rest of the jersey, I would say that the fact that this tag is missing is wholly understandable, as it most probably simply fell off after dozens of washings.

Wear And Repairs: This jersey shows major wear from excessive use, likely both from the minor leagues ands in spring training in years post-1981. Cey played for the Dodgers 1971-1982, and this jersey would generally have been used in by Cey in 1982 spring training, then stripped of its player name on back and sleeve patch and sent to the minor leagues for reissue. In 1982, the Dodgers had five minor league clubs, with four of them named "Dodgers", and reissue was the standard. Additionally, the ghost of the name BEYERS is visible on back. Minor leaguer Tom Beyers, who was approximately the same size as Ron Cey, was drafted in 1979 and active in the Dodgers minor league system through 1983, wore #10. This jersey was almost certainly reissued to him. As received, this jersey was very dirty from use and storage, and missing its name on back, the entire area above the back numbers was perforated with holes and showed the ghost of a removed long nameplate that had covered up that area.

Restoration Performed: The light table showed the clear glue outlines of the original name on back, "CEY". First we needed to stabilize the shredded fabric and repair the holes. Backing the weak area with a thin layer of dressmaker's interfacing, we used a darning stitch overtop to close up the holes in the same manner the team would have done back in the day. Once the area was stable, we aggressively cleaned the dried glue and ground in dirt, as best as possible. Using the original ghosts of the name on back, matched to our copy of the Dodgers' font template for that year we cut a new player name from blue Dodger twill and sewed it to a layer of white tackle twill. The sewn lettering was mildly distressed and slightly organically dyed to make it better match the other lettering on the jersey, then it was sewn in place exactly over the original ghosts.

Conclusion: All characteristics of this jersey allow me to conclude that it was worn by Ron Cey of the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1981. It is properly lettered, shows no contrivance or alteration and shows heavy use from subsequent reissue in the minor leagues. The name on back has been professionally and correctly restored.

Chapter 19

Montreal Expos

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

This Chapter Includes all Expos Jerseys, 1969-2004

William F. Henderson

Expos Uniform History Notes

- "Expo 67," the 1967 World's Fair in Montreal, was quite a big event in Canada. At the time, it must have seemed quite an exciting idea to name the new National League expansion team "Expos." Few today remember the team name's origin.
- The Expos strove for a modern, non-traditional look with their new uniforms. Instead of centering the team name on the jersey like most others did, they decided to put their logo—a stylized "M" in red, white, and blue—on the left chest. The Expos "M" logo contains the letters "E" and "B," standing for "Expos Baseball." Also added was the word "expos" below it in blue lowercase letters. Balancing the jersey, player numbers were placed on the right chest.t.
- Breaking with tradition, the Expos were the first team to use a stylized display font for their player numbers. For decades, teams had used some variation of Block, Varsity, or the McAuliffe/Red Sox font. Interestingly, in 1972—for a single year—the Oakland Athletics "borrowed" the Expos' number font for their own front numbers (while oddly leaving the jersey's back numbers in the old traditional Varsity style).
- The Expos switched from flannel to knit fabric in 1973—a year after most other teams make the change
- Regardless of the fabric change, the team continued to use the same basic, clean and simple uniform design for 23 consecutive years before changing to a script-front theme for 1992. They continued this look for 13 years, until the club moved to Washington, DC, and the Expos ceased to exist.
- 1980s Expos jerseys tend to run consistently smaller than other teams'—an Expos size 44 fits like most teams' size 42. Their players wore their uniforms skin tight during the '80s.
- Team tagging is very inconsistent from 1970–1993. Tags are sewn in different places, with different coding schemes and styles year to year. Team tagging was last done in 1993. Starting in 1994, there are no year/set tags. Nameplates were never used on MLB Expos jerseys.
- From 1973–1991, jerseys changed little, but number colors—and the color, style, and presence of player names—varied by year. Names on back arrived relatively late—in 1978. From 1992–2004, styles were very consistent—no real changes. Names and numbers were always in the colors of the Expos front logo.
- With the team's move to Washington to become the Nationals in 2005, the book closed on the Montreal Expos.

More than most teams, the Expos favored a skin-tight uniform look throughout the 1970s and '80s.

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

1969-1972 Home

Richard Gorny collection

Newly born in 1969, the expansion National League Expos wore flannel uniforms for their first four years. Regardless of fabric type, these original uniforms were fresh and innovative in design, appearing more modern than other teams' traditional uniforms.

Thin red/white/blue sewn-on knit trim adorns the sleeve ends, and a stylized "M" in three-color twill appears on the left chest.

The Expos were the first team to use a highly stylized number font on both the front and back of their jerseys, breaking from the standard Block or Varsity styles used by nearly every other team in baseball—except, perhaps, the Cubs, whose number font was also somewhat unique.

While most MLB teams switched to knits for 1972, the Expos and a few other clubs—primarily those with lower budgets (or were staunch traditionalists, like the Yankees)—continued wearing flannels throughout the season.

- Expos road jerseys for 1969 through 1972 were identical to their home uniforms, with the exception of the light blue flannel fabric. Only the White Sox had experimented with light blue road jerseys before 1969. Interestingly, the Seattle Pilots also introduced blue-gray road uniforms that year, and by 1970, the Phillies were using them as well.
- These featured single-color blue numbers on the back and right front—the first use in MLB of a non-traditional, ornate number font.

Expos Jerseys Sent to the Minor Leagues

Below: Vermont Expos hand-me-down, NOB covered with generic "EXPOS" plate

Starting in 1978, the big club began using player names on the back. When the jerseys were passed down to the minors (Memphis or Vermont), instead of removing the MLB players' names letter by letter, the farm teams covered the names on back with a sewn-on nameplate bearing the minor league club's name. For this reason, many game-worn Expo road uniforms show a visible "ghost" of the original player name—an area that exhibits less fading from sun exposure than the surrounding fabric.

Some examples of this practice are pictured here.

These jerseys are identified by the addition of wide knit racing stripes sewn into the shoulders and sides. Because these stripes are sewn into the sides rather than sewn on top as trim, Expos jerseys of this style often feel a size tighter than marked.

Front numbers, back numbers, and name are all one-color royal blue. A Block NOB is used. Team tagging is inconsistent from year to year.

Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

I do not have a confirmed date of use for this style, but these zip-neck jerseys were mostly provided by Majestic to every club. It was up to each club whether or not to use them. Roman Sport made some as well; the top example here is made by Starter.

The owner of the top row jersey claims it belonged to Expos manager Buck Rodgers, who managed the club from 1985–1991. It appears to lack a number on the back. Many teams treated this style of batting practice jersey more like a warm-up jacket and did not number them for players.

Starter held the contract to make official team jackets in the late 1990s. Sometimes, rules about brand exclusivity established in U.S. contracts are interpreted differently in Canada. It is possible Starter held the MLB contract there (speculative), as we have found a Cubs Starter zip-neck BP jersey with Diamond Collection tagging.

Player names were not used on batting practice jerseys from 1993 to 2000. The Expos generally sew their memorial patches on both batting practice and game jerseys.

It has a button front and is identical in construction to the home batting practice jersey, featuring the road script “Montreal” and fleur-de-lis on the front.

From 1992 to 2004, the Expos generally sew commemorative patches on all batting practice jerseys as well as their game jerseys.

These jerseys are made of softer, non-mesh early Cool Base-type fabric. They are identified by red piping on the shoulders and breathable underarm panels.

They feature two-color Varsity names and numbers in red and white on the front and back, with wide white outlines.

The fabric used to make these jerseys was not well suited to hard wear; it was easily pulled, faded in the sun, and was not resistant to bleach.

2003 Turn Back the Clock to 1969

Friday, August 22, 2003, was Turn Back the Clock day to 1969 in San Diego. Both the Padres and Expos dressed in throwbacks to the 1969 season, which was the first season for both National League expansion clubs.

Oddly, the uniforms made by Russell are gray rather than light blue. We do not believe that the MLB Expos ever wore gray road jerseys. While a few have appeared at auction over the years, none of our Expos experts or former players recall ever being issued gray jerseys, even for Spring Training in 1969, as we originally suspected.

The Expos' regular-season light blue 1969 uniforms are shown at leftt. The 1960s White Sox and the 1969 Expos and Seattle Pilots were the first to substitute light blue for the traditional road grays during the era.

2004 Turn Back the Clock to 1971

The July 9, 2004 “home” game was played in San Juan, Puerto Rico (although the tag says July 11, the game was actually played on July 9). The Expos wore double-knit copies of their 1971 home uniforms made by Mitchell & Ness.

They are very accurate in every detail except the fit, as almost no one wore baggy uniforms in 1971.

1969 Prototype/Sample Road

- This uniform is either a prototype for or a sample of the new-for-1969 Montreal Expos. It appears identical in every way to the production version of the Expos' 1969–1972 road uniform (game-worn version for comparison, inset at right).
- Notice the printed detail on a white twill tag sewn inside the back of the shirt just below the collar, typical of Wilson prototype or pre-production samples. The tag lists the production specifications of the completed garment.

1969-1972 Road Gray (Minor League?)

In prior editions, these jerseys were identified as 1969 Spring Training jerseys, but we no longer believe that is true. All are made by Wilson. These lack the red/white/blue braid trim on the sleeve ends and around the neck that would adorn the regular-season jerseys for 1969. The one at left is the only example I have seen so far with a front number.

In queries posed to surviving members of the original 1969 squad, as well as Expos collectors, none remembered these gray uniforms. These may have instead been minor league issues from the start.

1972 Team Tagged Knit Jersey — Mystery Solved

This jersey photo was submitted by a regular contributor to our pages prior to the publication of the 8th edition of this guide. Odd as the Expos did not wear knits until 1973, yet this showed what looked like a full season of wear. The mystery was solved by a note from reader Matt Malinoski. Thank you, Matt!

Cedar Rapids Gazette July 8th 1972. (Describing the allergic reaction Expos Ken Singleton had to wool flannel.) "The outfielder began carrying a notebook around with him everywhere he went to record what foods he ate. No luck. Four hours after the uniform went on, he broke out again. Finally, the obvious answer came—it must be the uniform. Last Sunday he sat for four hours in the Expos' clubhouse wearing the new-style double knit uniform, a sample the Expos had made before deciding whether they might switch. He wore it, and didn't break out this time."

"However, he can't wear it in a game because the pants do not fit. He is not even supposed to wear it because league rule dictate that uniforms must all be the same. "I think an exception will be made here until we finally make a move to the new knits," says General Manager Jim Fanning. "The knits are more comfortable, harder to tear, easier to clean and cost almost half as much."

© GameWornGuides.com

1973 Prototype (or Homemade?)

Here's an interesting item that I can't say for sure is a prototype, but I suspect it is. It is a Wilson knit road jersey in the 1973–1979 style, but with a direct embroidered, chain-stitched wordmark on the front. Chain stitching usually looks classy and has been used by a few teams over the years, most notably the Cardinals, Phillies, and Astros. It's not easy to do, as it requires a special and expensive embroidery machine.

It is unlikely anyone would have attempted this "at home" in the pre-computer embroidery era, but anything is possible. The team "M" has an almost freehand, less-than-perfect feel about it. I suggest this might be a design proposal done by Wilson for the Expos, probably at their request, and perhaps for the 1973 season as the team was preparing to switch to knits.

1973 Prototype/Sample Road

Listed for sale on an online auction site, this jersey was claimed to be game-worn, but its lack of wear and the tag inside the neck suggest otherwise. To us, this represents a Wilson sample or prototype from 1972 of the upcoming Expos 1973 knit jerseys. Numbers are treated with a white outline on this sample, just like the on-field 1973 jerseys to follow.

Note that the numbers on the back are sewn too high to have a player name properly sewn above them. Notice the sewn-in satin lining typical of Wilson-made pro model jerseys. Recall that while most teams had switched to knit jerseys by the 1972 season, the Expos lagged behind before they too made the switch.

1980 Year-Tagged 1979 Jerseys

Bill Henderson Collection

In prior editions of this book, I noted that over the years I have come across multiple jerseys tagged 1980 that were in the style of jersey last worn in 1979. I wondered aloud why these would have existed, because in 1980 the team had switched to uniforms with wide racing-stripe trim. The answer appears to be that there were two new sets of uniforms created near the close of the 1979 season, anticipating use in the playoffs. They were tagged "1980" because in any case, they would have been used the next season as well. The Expos contended for the NL East title until the very last day of the season, when they were pushed out of contention by the Phillies.

Had the Expos not changed styles for the 1980 season, these probably would have gone completely unnoticed. And looking at this practice, we have found that this is not an isolated example: the Phillies apparently wore 1984 year-tagged uniforms in the 1983 postseason.

As was true with the rest of the 1979 uniforms, the road sets were made by Wilson and the home ones by Rawlings. Most likely, these uniforms were worn in 1980 Spring Training, then sent to the minors where the names on back were covered up by fabric plates (see earlier page), as evidenced by unfaded shadows where the plates had been sewn.

1988 "Equitable All-Star Dream Team"

Barry Halper Collection

This jersey was used in an exhibition game that pitted the Expos' 20th Anniversary All-Star "Dream Team" against the Equitable Insurance Company-sponsored All-Stars on September 11, 1988. These were the jerseys of the Expos' Dream Team.

Made from a basic blank Expos jersey by Rawlings, the usual player number on the front is replaced by a "20 Ans-Years" logo (Ans is French for "Years")

It has a patch on the sleeve for Petro-Canada, a long-time Expos sponsor. An Expos collector writes that copies of this jersey were available for purchase through Petro-Canada gas stations in 1989. Notice the pro-style Rawlings tag inside the collar, which is where team-specific Expos jerseys of this era had their team tagging sewn.

Note the detail in the wordmark, which consists of a large white twill patch with individual stripes of red and blue sewn on.

1988/1989 Prototype Road Jersey

For 1989, the Expos changed details on their road jersey by outlining the red numbers and the team name with a blue border. They were apparently considering other color combinations as well.

This jersey, tagged 1988 and probably leftover from that season's end, received the Expos team wordmark in white and player numbers and names in white outlined with red. This is almost surely a Rawlings prototype of a design suggestion for 1989 that was not used.

Revealed: Minor League Expos Turn Back the Clock Jersey

Since an earlier edition, we have learned the origin of this jersey. And while it turns out to be a minor league issue, we will include it here to provide closure for readers.

When the Turn Back the Clock trend began in the mid-1990s, some teams had precious little history of their own to call upon, yet did not want to be left out of the fun. The Texas Rangers were one team that asked Mitchell & Ness make "phantom" styles for them, representing how the team may have looked in decades before the team existed.

We have located the press release for the Palm Beach Expos of April 7, 1994 that says, "The Expos… are also involved with the celebration of the City of West Palm Beach's 100th anniversary... In keeping with this historic season, the Expos' players and coaches will be outfitted in circa-1925 replica uniforms and caps"

Interesting AIS-Made Movie Prop Jersey

I regularly come across jerseys that are sell-offs from movie studios, though the movies are rarely identified, and as a rule I don't include those jerseys in the Guide. But this Expos jersey in the 1992–2004 style is an interesting case. It is made by AIS, the preferred vendor to the Mets during the 1990s and the maker of many on-field Negro Leagues throwbacks in MLB. What makes this jersey interesting is the Russell logo sewn on the sleeve, which I assume was added for authenticity. The logo is a sew-on type—the kind used on Russell replica jerseys—and not the embroidered logo sewn directly on the sleeve, as seen on the on-field Diamond Collection. Nevertheless, it is an interesting touch. That NOB font looked suspect to me, especially the crunched-width "W," but I matched it to game-worn jerseys and it is indeed correct!

© GameWornGuides.com

Condensed Font for Name-on-Back

This photo shows that the Expos (1995–1998) needed to find a solution to fit infielder Mark Grudzielanek's long name on the back of his road jersey. The Expos NOB font was bulky, and for a three-color application of a long name, it appears they had to come up with a narrowed version of the font for this jersey. I've not seen another Expos player use this NOB style.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Restoration

Larry Biittner 1975-1976 Montreal Expos Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: September 3, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0903J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White size 44 (both tagged and measured) Wilson-made road Montreal Expos jersey, restored to #17 as originally numbered. 1/2" Tri-color red/white/blue knit trim on each sleeve end. Montreal Tri-colored "M" logo/wordmark is stitched to the left chest. Player number on right chest and centered on back, no names on back used in 1975-1976. Jersey is lined inside the collar/placket with white linen for player comfort as was a characteristic of Wilson professional model jerseys. Larry Biittner , 6' 2" and 205 lbs had been issued #17 in 1975. The size was appropriate, and the Expos always seemed to wear their uniforms very tight in the 1970s-80s.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The small white rectangular Wilson manufacturer's tag noting the size as 44 is stitched inside the back of the collar with stitching invisible from the outside back of the collar, indication it was properly stitched there before the jersey placket was stitched closed. A small rectangle of jersey knit fabric is zig-zag stitched onto the lower left outside tail, "75 Set 1" is hand chain-stitched embroidered in blue and in the familiar hand of the Wilson factory stitcher.

Wear and Repairs, Restoration: The jersey shows signs of heavy use, with fading and puckering of the front crest and its attaching thread. Even though the jersey is tagged for 1975, The red and white Olympics disc patch worn by the Expos during the 1976 season is stitched to the right sleeve, and it appears original. As received, the jersey showed heavy wear and was very dirty. It was renumbered to 36 and had been autographed on the center of the back in black assumedly by a minor league player or coach. The light table clearly revealed with ghosts that the numbers 17 had been on this jersey prior. I stripped the numbers and cleaned the autograph off, then aggressively laundered the jersey to try to return it to its original bright white. The process was successful, as the jersey as restored is quite clean and presentable.

The Expos were a frugal organization that wasted nothing. Biittner wore #17 in 1975, and he began the season with the Expos in 1976 wearing the same number, though he was traded to the Cubs on May 17, 1976 after appearing in just 11 games. Given the presence of the 1976 sleeve patch, It is possible that he was re-issued this jersey the next season as a backup. It is likely that this jersey was reissued after he was traded, a common practice when players joined the roster after the start of the season. There are two possibilities: As a part of the Biittner deal, the Cubs sent Andre Thornton to the Expos where he was assigned #17, and is listed as exactly the same height and weight as Biittner. Or, alternatively, it could have been renumbered to 36 (as received prior to restoration) and issued to pitcher Steve Dunning, also nearly the same size man, who joined the team and was assigned 36 in late May 1976. The jersey was washed many times with the 36 in place, given the visible puckering and staining of these faded numbers.

Conclusion: This jersey is in good, heavily-used condition, after restoration is properly lettered, sized and tagged to match exemplars and has an explainable player name and number change. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Larry Biittner of the 1975 Montreal Expos, and likely was reissued and worn by another player (either Thornton or Dunning) in 1976.

Examination Date: November 15, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1115J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson-made and team-tagged as 1974, size 40 seven-button Columbia Blue Montreal Expos jersey, matching original set of dark blue-gray buttons. Red/white/blue knit trim sewn at the ends of both sleeves. The placket is lined with blue satin for player comfort, typical of Wilson pro jerseys. Expos crest on the left chest in red, white and Royal Blue, player numbers in the team font on the right chest and centered on the back. No player names used in 1974.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Well worn Wilson tagging noting the size as 40 is sewn into the back of the neck in the proper style for 1974. On the outside front left tail is stitched a rectangle of jersey fabric, with "74 Set 1" hand chain stitched onto it in blue thread, matching the familiar handwriting of the Wilson factory stitcher.

Wear and Repairs/Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey was dirty and showed heavy use. It is faded, and was glue-stained around the numbers, showing signs of having been renumbered multiple times. It wore #50 as received, and a ghost of an earlier "50" was visible, misaligned with the current number placement. Larry Parrish wore that number in 1974, but at 6' 3" and 215 lbs, Parrish wore size 46-50 throughout his career. Removing the numbers revealed the faint impression of the outlines of the original number, 10. In 1974, that number was assigned all season to infielder Jim Cox, who at 5' 11" and 175 lbs could have worn this size jersey. The front Expos crest was puckered, discolored and shrunken with failing thread from dozens of washings. Its owner wanted all elements to match when restored, so we elected to replace the team crest along with the player numbers as a set. When the front crest was removed, the fabric beneath expanded a full half inch owing to the major puckering that had occurred from the shrunken twill sewn on top. I first cleaned the glue and staining as much as possible, then spot treated and laundered the jersey to brighten it. When re-sewn, all new elements were matched to the ghosts. The jersey body exhibits fading and some pilling of the fabric especially below the front numbers at the side seam. The ghosts of two sets of competing numbers 50 are still visible on the light table.

Second baseman Jim Cox appeared in 77 games, starting in 68 of them for the 1974 Expos, more than an any other season of his four year MLB career. In 239 at bats, He hit .220 with 2 home runs.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Al Oliver 1982 Montreal Expos Game Used Home Jersey, NL Batting Title Year

Examination Date: April 1, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0401J05

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White size 42 (both tagged and measured) Rawlings-made road Montreal Expos jersey of outfielder Al Oliver. Wide sewn-in red/blue knit stripes inset on both sides and on the tops of the sleeves. Montreal Tri-colored "M" logo/wordmark is stitched to the left chest. Player number "0" on right chest and centered on back, with his name "Oliver" arched above, all in the proper fonts colors and placement for the 1982 Expos. Oliver wore size 42 throughout his career.

Oliver had been traded to the Expos on March 31 1982, just a week before the start of the regular season, notably several weeks past the reasonable time that team's 1982 uniforms had been ordered from Rawlings. Not surprisingly then, this jersey was a hasty reissue, with 1981 tagging inside and showing evidence of having been issued to/worn by #18, outfielder Jerry White the prior season. White's name and number are clearly visible in silhouette on the light table. Quite likely, a new uniform was ordered for Oliver for use during the regular season, but as they were a frugal organization most likely this one was used all season as well.

(From Wikipedia) In 1982 with the Expos, Oliver hit a career-high .331 batting average to win the National League batting crown. He also led the NL in hits (204), doubles (43), extra bases (67), and total bases (317), and tied with Dale Murphy for the RBI lead with 109. His 43 doubles tied his 1980 career-high, and his 67 extra base hits was also a career-high as well as his 22 home runs, breaking his 1973 personal best. In addition to playing in his sixth All-Star game, he was third in the NL MVP voting and won his third consecutive Silver Slugger Award, this time as a first baseman. He was also the first baseman on The Sporting News' NL All-Star Team. He was voted the Montreal Expos Player of the Year at the end of the season.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings red rectangular locker tag marking the size as 42 is stitched into the center of the inside back of the collar. Generally odd, but typical for 1981-issued Expos jerseys, The flag tab noting 1981 Set 1 is sewn separately inside the side of the shirt tail, rather than pinching it beneath the locker tag as is usually done.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows signs of moderate to heavy use, with some graying of the fabric, numerous small pulls, fading of the front crest's attaching thread and the aforementioned name and number change.

Conclusion: This jersey is in good, heavily-used condition, is properly lettered, sized and tagged to match exemplars and has an explainable player name and number change. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Al Oliver of the 1982 Montreal Expos.

Gary Carter 1982 Montreal Expos Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: February 21, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0221J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Columbia Blue six-button size 46 (both tagged and measured) road Montreal Expos jersey of Hall of Fame catcher Gary Carter. Carter wore both size 44 and 46 jerseys at this point in his career, I will note that Expos jerseys with their sewn-in side stripes almost always were tight, and players wearing them often opted for the next larger size. Wide sewn-in red/blue knit stripes inset on both sides and on the tops of the sleeves. Montreal tricolored "M" logo/wordmark is stitched at an angle on the left chest above the word "Expos" in red. Player number 8 sewn on right chest and centered on back, with his name "CARTER" arched above, all in the proper unique fonts for the 1982 Expos, in the correct colors and placement. In 1982, the Expos hosted the MLB All-Star Game, and all game jersey both home and road had the All-Star disk patch sewn on the left sleeve. The patch is missing but a clear imprint of its outline remains; these patches were routinely removed at the end of the season since these jerseys were re-used in the next year's spring training.

In 154 games played for the 1982 Montreal Expos, Carter hit .293 with 29 home runs. He was named an All-Star 11 times in his 19 year career, 1974-1992. In 2003, he was inducted into the National Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, New York. He was the first Hall of Famer whose plaque depicts the player as a member of the Montreal Expos. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings red rectangular locker tag correct for 1982 marking the size as 46 is stitched into the center of the inside back of the collar. The stitching holding the tag in place is not visible from the outside of the jersey, telling us that the tag was sewn there before the placket was sewn closed, as is correct for team issue. Generally odd, but typical for the 1981-1982 Expos, the flag tab noting 1982 Set 1 is sewn separately inside the side of the shirt tail, rather than pinching it beneath the locker tag as is usually done. The tag is faded and moderately worn. 1984 pre-dated Rawlings' logo being sewn on the sleeve; these sleeve ends are plain. Inside the right front tail is a 1x 2 3/4" piece of Columbia Blue twill with "82 1 Carter" hand chain stitched on it in red embroidery thread, in the familiar handwriting of the Rawlings factory stitcher. This tag matches exemplars.

At left, on the left sleeve of the jersey in review, the clear stitching impression of the removed All-Star patch disk. Team jerseys were routinely recycled into spring training the following season, and the removal of year-specific patches was the standard. Below, Exemplars from my library of other 1982 Expos jerseys that are reasonably likely to be authentic. Early 1980s Expos jersey somewhat unusually featured the set/year tab sewn into a side seam or inside the front tail placket

Conclusion: This jersey is in very good, well-used condition, are properly lettered, sized and tagged to match exemplars and has no contrivances of any kind. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Gary Carter of the 1982 Montreal Expos.

Andre Dawson 1981 Montreal Expos Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: April 1, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0401J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Columbia Blue six-button size 46 (both tagged and measured) road Montreal Expos jersey of outfielder Andre Dawson. Wide sewn-in red/blue knit stripes inset on both sides and on the tops of the sleeves. Montreal tricolored "M" logo/ wordmark is stitched to the left chest. Player number 10 on right chest and centered on back, with his name "Dawson" arched above, all in the proper fonts colors and placement for the 1981 Expos. (Note that the name is clocked lower on one side than the other, a detail that will be useful if photo matching of this jersey is ever attempted.)

1981 was a career-year for Dawson, In 103 games for the Montreal Expos he batted .302, was elected to his first All-Star game, and won his second Gold Glove. He was inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in 2010 and his number 10 was retired by the Montreal Expos. After winning the 1977 NL Rookie of the Year, he earned selection to eight All-Star teams, win eight Gold Glove Awards and was the NL MVP in 1987.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings red rectangular locker tag marking the size as 46 is stitched into the center of the inside back of the collar. Generally odd, but typical for the 1981 Expos, Unusual for other teams but typical for the 1981 Expos, The flag tab noting 1981 Set 1 is sewn separately inside the side of the shirt tail, rather than pinching it beneath the locker tag as is usually done.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows signs of light use and wear, and is still bright and clean without any damage or loose stitching. A light table evaluation shows that all stitching is original and without contrivance.

Conclusion: This jersey is in good, lightly-used condition, are properly lettered, sized and tagged to match exemplars and has no contrivances of any kind. It is my considered opinion that this jerseys made to team specifications and worn by Andre Dawson of the 1981 Montreal Expos.

Jeff Fassero 1992 Montreal Expos Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: June 13, 2023 Certification Number: 23–0613J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Montreal Expos white with blue pinstripes home jersey #39, pitcher Jeff Fassero. Russell size 46, six-button, heavyweight double-knit. "Expos" across both front panels in Dark Royal Blue over red with underline, Player number 39 on the left front and on the back, direct-sewn name arched above in the correct font and colors for the team, also in the dark Royal blue/red. The round red/white/blue Expos disk team patch is stitched to the left sleeve. Fassero, at 6' 1" and 195 would have reasonably worn this size jersey.

1992 was the second year of Fassero's 16 year MLB career. That season he appeared in 70 games pitched a total of 85.2 innings, all in relief and went 8-7 with a 2.84 ERA.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all sewn elements on this jersey are original and without contrivance. The jersey shows light wash/wear, as all lettering is still crisp and unwrinkled. There is some light staining around the tag area. There are no repairs to the jersey.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent condition, is properly lettered, team tagged. and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It is my considered opinion that this jersey shows wear and was issued to Jeff Fassero of the 1992 Montreal Expos.

Hubie Brooks 1987 Montreal Expos Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: August 30, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0830J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Columbia Blue six-button size 46 (both tagged and measured) road Montreal Expos jersey. At 36" in length, The jersey is tailored with 2" extra length though it is not tagged as such. Exemplars of other jerseys worn by Brooks are size 46 with 2"extra length marked. Wide sewn-in red/blue knit stripes inset on both sides and on the tops of the sleeves. Montreal tricolored "M" logo/wordmark is stitched at an angle on the left chest above the word "Expos" in red. Player number 7 sewn on right chest and centered on back, with his name "BROOKS" arched above, all in the proper unique fonts for the 1987 Expos, in the correct colors and placement.

Versatile infielder/outfielder Hubie Brooks enjoyed a 15 year MLB career, playing for six teams. In 1987, while he was injured for part of the season, he appeared in 112 games for the Expos hitting .263 with 14 home runs. He was selected to the All-Star team that year, for the second consecutive year, to represent the Expos. At the time of his retirement, Brooks was the active major league leader in games played without making it to the post season (1,645) (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings red rectangular locker tag correct for 1987 marking the size as 46 is stitched into the center of the inside back of the collar. To its right is a rectangular piece of red twill with 46T 87 1 machine embroidered on it (size 46 tapered, 1987, set 1) The stitching holding the tagging in place is not visible from the outside of the jersey, telling us that the tags were sewn there before the placket was sewn closed, as is correct for team issue. The Rawlings script is embroidered at the end of the right sleeve in white, this was the first year for this appearance. This tagging matches exemplars.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows signs of light use and wear, and is still bright and clean without any damage or loose stitching. A light table evaluation shows that all stitching and elements are original and without contrivance.

Conclusion: This jersey is in very good, lightly used condition, is properly lettered, and sized. It is tagged to match exemplars and has no contrivances of any kind. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Hubie Brooks of the 1987 Montreal Expos.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Brett Gideon 1990 Montreal Expos Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: February 26, 2025 Certification Number: 25-0226J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Columbia Blue six-button size 46 with +1" length (both tagged and measured) six-button Montreal Expos road jersey. However, at 33" in length it does not display this extra length as marked, 33" is a standard length for a size 46 Rawlings jersey. Wide sewn-in red/blue knit stripes inset on both sides and on the tops of the sleeves. Montreal tricolored "M" logo/ wordmark is stitched at an angle on the left chest above the word "Expos" in red outlined with blue.

As received, this jersey had been previously changed by another fan/collector to (star player) #33 Larry Walker jersey, using slightly inaccurate fonts. It is not realistic to think that Walker, who played part of 1989 and the entire 1990 season for the Expos ever wore this jersey. Recognizing it as a team issued jersey for another player, its new owner wanted to restore it to its original appearance, and he stripped the replacement names and numbers. When I received it, the black light revealed that it had originally belonged to journeyman pitcher Brett Gideon, #26, who at 6'2" and 200 lbs would have fit in this jersey. Gideon had a brief career spanning three seasons and pitched only one inning in early April 1990 for the Expos where he gave up two hits and one run before being released, ending his MLB career. A 1987 single in his only at-bat left Gideon with a rare MLB career batting average of 1.000.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Rawlings white rectangular locker tag correct for 1990 marking the size as 46 is stitched into the center of the inside back of the collar. To its right is a rectangular piece of blue twill with 46 90 machine embroidered on it (size 46 tapered, 1990) , then a flag tab pinch-sewn under the twill that says SET 1 1990. Sewn above the twill tag is a white tag that reads 1 INCH EXTRA LENGTH. The stitching holding all this tagging in place is not visible from the outside of the jersey, telling us that the tags were sewn there before the placket was sewn closed, as is correct for team issue. The Rawlings script is embroidered at the end of the right sleeve in white, as is correct. This tagging matches exemplars.

Restoration performed: Using the light table images combined with the original team patterns, Gideon's name and number #26 was restored to the jersey using the proper fabrics, exactly over the ghosts of the original lettering.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows signs of extremely light use as would be expected, and its appears it was not reissued to another player after Gideon briefly used it .It is bright and clean without any damage at all.

Letter of Professional Opinion

2001-2003 Vladimir Guerrero Montreal Expos Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: February 8, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0208J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Montreal Expos Gray road style jersey #27, Hall of Fame player Vladimir Guerrero. Russell size 50, six-button, heavyweight double-knit, gray body with red/white/blue 1.5" sleeve end trim. "Montreal" across both front panels in red/dark Royal Blue/white script with underline, a small embroidered blue fleur de lis is stitched above the "e". Player number 27 on the left front and on the back, direct-sewn name arched above in the correct font and colors for the team, also in the same red/dark Royal blue/white. The round red/white/blue Expos disk team patch is stitched to the left sleeve.

This jersey was presented to me as a 2003 issue, but in reality there are no differences between 2001-2003 Expos road jerseys, and the team did not year or player tag jerseys, so without provenance, pinpointing the year of issue is unlikely. A star member of the Expos 1996-2003, his imminent departure from the team at his contract's end spurred great demand for his collectables from Montreal.

A 2018 inductee into baseball's Hall of Fame, Guerrero is one of just three Dominican-born players to be inducted into the Hall, joining former teammate Pedro Martinez and Giant Juan Marichal. He retired following the 2011 season with a .318 career batting average, 449 home runs, 1,496 RBI and 2,590 hits. He was named to nine All-Star Games, won eight Silver Slugger Awards and led his league in assists twice as an outfielder. (Baseball Almanac)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell "Authentic Collection" tag is stitched to the outer left front tail in the correct style used 2001-2003. Pinch-sewn beneath the center of the tag are two overlapping fabric flag tabs, the top one reads 50 100% Nylon, the one beneath says +2" Extra Length. The measurements match the tagging, and this tailoring matches other reliably authenticated Guerrero jerseys in our photo archives. The Russell "R" logo in red/blue is direct embroidered to the end of the left sleeve between the sleeve end trim and the team patch. The MLB Silhouetted Batter patch in red/white/blue, first used in 2001, is stitched to the center of the back of the neck. Multiple hallmarks tell us that this is a team-issue style jersey, not one made for retail sale. The special tailoring, the "in between" size 50 not made for retail sale, and the size tag on the tail rather than in the neck are all notable.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all sewn elements on this jersey are original and without contrivance. The jersey does not show obvious signs of wash or wear, as all sewn elements as well as tags are still crisp and unwrinkled. There are no repairs to the jersey.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent condition, is properly lettered, team tagged. and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was team issued made to the specifications of Vladimir Guerrero of the 2001-2003 Montreal Expos.

Chapter 20

San Francisco Giants

Game-Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys 1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Giants Uniform History Notes

- Although the San Francisco Giants have updated their "look" several times, the team has maintained mostly traditional, similar uniforms through the decades—except for 1977–1982, when they adopted flashy, colorful pullovers for a six-year stretch. Even then, the logo script used on their jersey front is their long-standing alternate script, first introduced in New York in the late 1940s.
- The Giants "eased into" the double-knit era more slowly than most. They began the 1970 season wearing the same style flannels they had worn since 1958, their first year in San Francisco. In the middle of the 1972 season, they switched to identically styled double knits at home. Road uniforms remained flannel throughout 1972.
- The Giants used the 1973 changeover from flannels to knits to revise the colors on their uniforms. The 1973 uniforms are the same design as the 1972 flannels, except that the black and orange color scheme is reversed. The team also adds player names to jerseys for the first time. This style continues through the 1976 season.
- For 1977, the Giants finally follow the crowd and switch to pullover jerseys, including an orange road top replacing the gray. The home jersey wordmark becomes the stylized script "Giants" logo the team used in print since 1947. The orange road uniform is a one-year design with "San Francisco" vertically arched across the front; finding a surviving one today is a rarity.
- For 1978, the team adds a new black pullover as their primary road jersey and the orange jersey becomes an alternate, removing "San Francisco" from the front, as all three jerseys now use the same cursive "Giants" script angled on front.
- In 1981, the team adds a short-lived, one-year black mesh jersey, similar in design to the regular black road jersey, giving the players a more breathable option for hot weather games. Many of these jerseys have an odd, substandard Giants script and non-vertically arched names that are worn on the field at the same time with the standard black jerseys.
- 1983 sees a return to tradition, and the reintroduction of home whites and road grays with button-up fronts. "Giants" is arched on the front in newly stylized letters, and on the road jersey, an interlocking SF design is sewn on the left chest that mirrors the team's hat logo. Player names are vertical arch, and the numbers are in a classy font that is special to the Giants
- For the 1993 season, the front "Giants" lettering returns to almost the same look as the 1970 uniforms. The road grays again read "San Francisco," but in a less stylized font similar to the 1977 one-year design. Player names and numbers stay the same style as they had been since 1983. This style runs through 1999.
- For 2000, the Giants move to their new ballpark on the Bay, and reintroduce uniforms for home and road that are near copies of their ultra-traditional pre-1973 uniforms. Home uniforms are made from old-fashioned-appearing cream-colored knit, use a version of the Varsity number font, and omit player names. Road grays have player names on back. The player number font is a version of Varsity that is unique to the Giants.
- A black alternate home jersey is used in 2001 only, and a black alternate road jersey is used in 2001–2002 only. Seldom worn, the black jerseys nevertheless get much airtime: this is the year that Barry Bonds is chasing the single-season home run record, and he is seen - An orange home alternate jersey is added for 2010, and updated in 2014. In 2012, a road alternate with the 1983–1992 interlocking SF is added. A black road alternate is added for 2015. Its back lettering is modified for visibility in 2017.
- Player names return to the back of home jerseys in 2021 for the first time since 1999, the team's final season at Candlestick Park.
- City Connect uniforms debut in 2021, featuring a white jersey (a rare base color for the series) with bright orange details meant to evoke San Francisco's iconic fog and the Golden Gate Bridge. The gradient "G" front logo and numbers appear to rise out of the mist in orange-to-white fades, while the sleeves display stylized bridge imagery. Despite the concept, fan and media reaction were generally negative.
- 2025 brings a City Connect 2.0 uniform that pays tribute to the city's psychedelic rock era and rich musical heritage. The black jersey features sublimated wave patterns representing sound vibrations, with a gradient "Giants" script in white/orange/black/violet across the chest. A glove-shaped sleeve patch and violet trim nod to the city's vibrant counterculture past, while player names appear in orange and numbers in black/orange. The uniform is seen as a more energized and cohesive follow-up to the team's earlier City Connect effort "miss."

Footnote detail refers to asterisks on the prior page

*The name font used on the Giants' 1973-76 uniforms looks much like (but is not identical to) the font I have named "Majestic Block," which I have illustrated later in this reference. While the Giants uniforms were made by Wilson and McAuliffe, they used two San Francisco area shops: Fielders Choice from 1975 until mid-1982 (using the shop's own version of fonts that included the Giants' unique numbers 1973-1976); and McAdams in Millbrae, CA from 1982 through 2005. Another characteristic of the Giants' player name lettering is that it sometimes uses different width lettering (wide, standard) depending on the length of the player name. This seems to have continued through 1977. In 1978, the Giants switched to a stylized and bolder variant of Vertical Arch -- again, used only by them.

 From 1977-1982, player names are generally Vertical Arch. Sources report that mid-season call-ups sometimes have the simpler, non-vertical arch names. However, many non-vertical arched names seen on surviving jerseys today are restorations; NOBs were typically stripped after the jersey left the parent MLB Giants to go to the minors.

The Giants sometimes recycled one of their two sets of uniforms for use the next year. We know that they recycled 1983 uniforms into 1984, because many 1983 jerseys exist with the 1984 All-Star patch sewn on the sleeve. They also did this in 1973, recycling a set of those uniforms into 1974.

1972

Giants home flannels in 1970–1972 were supplied by Wilson and McAuliffe. Each manufacturer had its own version of the team's front wordmark. Wilson's was lighter in stroke; McAuliffe's, bolder. Because the same basic uniform style had been used for years, it was quite likely that players would be seen on the field in a mix of Wilson and McAuliffe jerseys, with some wearing prior years' jerseys recycled for current-year use.

Lettering was a hybrid combination of black felt zig-zag stitched on top of a layer of orange tackle twill. This method was used by a few teams at the end of the flannel era.

Home flannels were used exclusively in 1970 and 1971, with a June 1972 switch to home knits. The home flannels were then relegated to use in Spring Training and passed down to the many Giants minor league clubs. Used uniforms, especially from common players, held little collector value in those days.

1970-1972 Road

Giants road flannels in 1970–1972 were supplied by both Rawlings and Wilson. Each manufacturer had its own version of the team's front wordmark and back numbers. Rawlings' lettering was bolder; Wilson's, taller, and thinner. Just as with the home jerseys, it was quite likely that players would be seen on the field in a mix of both manufacturers' jerseys, with some wearing prior-year jerseys recycled for current-year use. Even the earlier Spalding jerseys were sometimes in the mix.

Road flannels were used exclusively from 1970 to 1972. The switch to road knits did not happen until the start of the 1973 season.

June-Oct 1972 Home

- The Giants began the 1972 season wearing flannels at home and on the road. By the beginning of June, they had switched to double knits at home. The Giants wore the home double knits for the rest of the season. However, the team stayed with its gray flannel road uniforms all year and did not switch to the new fabric for road jerseys until the start of the 1973 season.
- Wilson and McAuliffe supplied knit uniforms. Both manufacturers had made Giants flannel home jerseys for nearly a decade. Notice that the number font on the back was slightly different, depending on the manufacturer. It would be interesting to look at game photos from 1972 to see if both styles of knit jerseys were used on the field at the same time, or if they were kept in distinct, separate sets.
- The 1972 home double knits match the 1971–1972 home flannels in trim, lettering color, and number style, but use tackle twill decoration. The 1972 knit jerseys had a short life. For 1973, home jerseys reverse the black/orange color scheme for the lettering.
- The jersey pictured at right is likely not game-worn. #24, Willie Mays, was traded to the Mets 20 games into the 1972 season—almost certainly before the Giants began wearing double knits on the field. It is likely that a double knit jersey had been prepared for Mays' use; then again, like many "star player" jerseys, it is highly likely to be a recreation.

Lettering color scheme reverses for 1973. Lettering style changes slightly; it is a bit more angular, with sharper points. Names and nameplates appear on the backs of all jerseys.

Two-color orange/black Varsity-like numbers appear on the back; they are a variant of the strict font.

Names are in a slightly fat variant of Block type, also two-color orange/black.

Both Wilson and McAuliffe made these uniforms in 1973–1975; I believe Wilson was the only home vendor in 1976.

Note the wide variant of Block used for these player names. See notes on 1973–1977 player NOBs in the footnotes of the Overview section at the start of this chapter.

Road grays switch to double knit in 1973, lagging behind the team's home uniforms by a year. Names appear on the back of all jerseys; nameplates are used in 1975–1976. Names are in a variant of Block type (wider), also two-color orange/black.

Two-color orange/black Varsity-like numbers appear on the front and back; they are a taller, narrower variant of the strict font. Note the long diagonal stroke on the "2."

Jersey style changes to a V-neck pullover with wide elastic sewn-in sleeve ends and V-neck, in black/white/orange. The Giants' 1947 print logo script appears on the jersey front for the first time. Two-color black/orange names and numbers appear. Player names are in a Wilson Varsity Giants Block variant that is unique to 1977; they switch to a slightly different (narrower) number font and vertical arch style player names from 1978 to 1982; nameplates are used. Wilson is the manufacturer. Its label is inside the neck, while player and year tagging is on the outside front tail.

Tradition goes out the window with the introduction of these pull-over orange road jerseys, which are worn for only one season.

Two-color black/white Varsity numbers appear on the front and back. These Varsity numbers are not exactly like Varsity Standard; note the lack of the small angled serif on the "6" and the "9."

Names are in Block, with variations noted (see Overview page footnotes for more details). All names are two-color black/white, usually on nameplates. Evidently, this set of jerseys was sent to the minors for a second life after the majors; every one of these jerseys I have seen appears to have a replacement NOB.

Above: Note stitch marks around the "San Francisco" wordmark on the front of the jersey. Surely the jersey was sent to the minors, where the lettering was covered up, most likely replaced with orange cloth with the lettering of the Giants' minor league club. The plate was then removed, leaving this puckered outline behind.

1977-1982 Giants Jersey Script Variations

1947 Giants print logo

The swoopy script logo that appeared on the San Francisco Giants' home white jersey in 1977 was not new—it was actually created as the team's official "print" logo for the (then) New York Giants of 1947. This script was used on all three team jerseys (1978–1982), white, orange, and black.

Careful eyes will note that the Wilson pattern used in 1977–1978 was different from the one used in 1979–1982. The earlier version was laid at a slightly steeper italic angle, and the details of several of the letters (notably the G and the S) were shaped differently.

Also different was the version used on the Alpha-made road black mesh jerseys of 1981. These used a very poorly drawn version for the first set, and a revised version closer to the Wilson font for the later, second set.

Finally, Mitchell & Ness, when making reproductions of this era's jerseys, inexplicably chose a bastardized version of the Alpha script as their version.

All of these variants are presented here together for comparison.

For 1978, the front logo remains the same style as 1977, but the player number font changes slightly to a Wilson varsity variant that is marginally wider. Player names are newly vertically arched, still on nameplates.

From 1979 to 1982, the Giants wordmark changes slightly (see prior page for that detail), and all other elements remain the same as in 1978.

Because most of these jerseys were sent to the minor leagues for reuse after their MLB service was through, a high percentage are without name-plates or have reproductions.

1981 Road Mesh

By 1981, the Giants players had been complaining about how heavy and hot the black pullover jerseys were, so the Giants ordered a complete set of mesh black game jerseys from Alpha for that season only, to be worn on the road for hot weather game at the discretion of each player or coach.

Steve notes that the original, complete set from Alpha was lettered with a sub-standard Giants script variant created by Alpha (see #47 at right). By mid-season, when additional jerseys were needed, the Giants ordered more from the shop where Steve worked in the Bay area, instead of directly from Alpha. Steve kept on hand a quantity of blank Alpha mesh jerseys that he lettered with the correct Giants front script and the proper Wilson Varsity numbers. He notes that Alpha used a bastardized number variant (the one that uses the diagonal stroke on the number 2 (see "Smith" top right).

The player names on the jerseys were not the team's standard vertical arch; instead, they were the shop's football jersey font and were sewn on solid (not mesh) nameplates. These jerseys do not have year tags

Steve noted amusement when he would see news photos of the Giants in that year, and he could easily tell which players were wearing his jerseys, compared to those who were wearing the Alpha-sewn set.

Names were sewn on nameplates because this was faster to do; nameplates were typically solid fabric.*

Tradition returns, with button-front shirts and belted pants. A custom Giants name and number font is introduced and used through 1999. Note the use of the new custom Giants name font, vertically arched on nameplates. The condensed version of the name font is used for the longish NOB (used for “Manwaring”) compared to the standard-width NOB used for the others. Names and numbers are two-color black/orange.

Essentially identical, this style is made by Wilson (1983–1986), Rawlings (1987–1991), and Russell (1992–1993). A mystery to me still: even though three manufacturers produce these jerseys, all of these vertically arched names appear to have been hand drawn by an unknown draftsperson with remarkable consistency in style. Though no two are exactly alike, I wonder whether the same person—or different people—drew them.

Tradition returns with button-front shirts and belted pants. Interlocking black-over-orange "SF" on the jersey's left chest is similar to the logo worn on caps since the Giants moved to San Francisco in 1958.

A custom Giants number font is introduced and used through 1999; the use of the custom font and vertically arched names continues, with names on nameplates. Names and numbers are two-color black/orange. The orange fabric is a special shade known as "Frisco Orange" by its maker; it is a less intense shade of orange than used previously.

The Giants' player name font is a custom, wider, bolder Block vertical arch variant that is unique to the 1983–1999 Giants, and no two are alike; each is created by hand by an artist at the factory. Knit sewn-in sleeve end trim is five-striped, with alternating bands of orange, black, and gray.

Wilson is the team's vendor from 1983 to 1986. Notice the use of black trim on the placket and around the collar, and compare with how later vendors did it, on the next page.

Rawlings takes over the contract from Wilson in 1987. I am told they initially made an error (above), omitting the black trim around the collar. The team liked the change, and so Rawlings (1987–1992) and 1993 Russell jerseys remain this way through the end of the style's run in 1993.

Game-worn jersey with its back numbers 10½ inches from the collar? I doubt this was the template—it was probably considered "personal choice" by the stitcher. I'd call it a stitcher error. 8" is the norm.

1983-1993 Giants Team Tagging

During this period, the Giants use three manufacturers—Wilson, Rawlings, and Russell—to make their two sets of game jerseys. Each manufacturer uses its own style of team tagging, but all game-worn jerseys are tagged in some way. Shown here is a mix of home and away jersey tagging. Russell jerseys start in 1992.

A year square sewn on a jersey without other information often indicates that the jersey was an "extra" at the start of the season, to be modified at some time in the future for a player.

Giants Jerseys Sent to the Minor Leagues

Like all MLB teams, the Giants send their prior-year uniforms to the minor leagues, where they are reissued and used—sometimes to the point of destruction. In the 1970s and 1980s, the Giants had five or more farm teams each year—nearly all named "Giants." But since the MLB team used its city name on road uniforms, these had to be stripped and re-lettered for minor league use. A few examples are shown below. At left, the 1976 Phoenix Giants stripped the tall "SAN FRANCISCO" lettering from their donated uniforms. The 1978 Waterbury Giants covered up the large city name on the MLB Giants' one-year orange road jerseys with an orange plate. Evidence of this is shown on the rescued example, adjacent. The example in the middle/right shows how the interlocking SF on a game-used 1983–1993 road jersey was replaced with the "Giants" crest for its minor league reuse.

Russell is the official on-field supplier of uniforms to the Giants, and the Russell logo is embroidered on the left sleeve end. However, oddly, a few players—seemingly both stars and everyday players—are issued Rawlings uniforms, for whatever reason.

These Rawlings jerseys have no sleeve-end logo (contractually) and are team-tagged with year and set information on the inside of the tail, while Russell ones are not tagged at all. Nameplates are always used. Use of the custom Giants numbers font continues.

Stylized "San Francisco" replaces the SF logo on fronts; backs remain identical to the earlier style. Names are still vertically arched and appear on nameplates. Use of the custom Giants number font continues. Russell is the official on-field supplier of uniforms to the Giants, and the Russell logo is embroidered on the left sleeve end. However, oddly, a very few players are issued Rawlings uniforms, for whatever reason. These Rawlings jerseys have no sleeve-end logo (contractually) and are team-tagged with year and set information on the inside of the tail, while Russell ones are not tagged at all. Nameplates are always used.

These examples of Rawlings jerseys are shown for interest. But my archives show that nearly all players wore Russell uniforms from 1994–1999. The reason some individuals were issued Rawlings jerseys remains a mystery.

- Return to old-style tradition as jersey style, lettering, trim, and jersey color closely resemble the pre-1973 flannel jersey, including the cream fabric color.
- No names on back of home jerseys for the first time since 1972. Jersey remains without name on back until they are added again in 2021 without nameplates.
- Numbers are a new custom Giants Varsity, three-color black/orange/gold drop-shadow. The gold drop shadow is VERY narrow—about 1/8″. The gold is called "Nugget" and is the same color of twill used on San Francisco 49ers' uniforms.
- In 2000, numbers on the back are the same size as the road jerseys (7 ½″). There are no names on the home jerseys, making the 2000 numbers appear too small; starting in 2001, they were increased to 8″ tall.
- No team year tagging 2000–2004, though special tailoring tags are often seen (right).
- 2000–2004 versions made by Russell, 2005–2019 by Majestic, 2020–2023 by Nike.

This sleeve patch used 2005-2010.

For 2005, a narrow, subtle gold drop shadow was added to the San Francisco lettering on the front. It is almost invisible, even up close. Starting in 2005, all Giants jerseys—home, road, and batting practice—have gold drop shadows on their lettering.

Names and numbers also feature a gold drop shadow to match the wordmark.

Oddly, this change was a "surprise"—not reported or documented in the annual official MLB Style Guide update; the team just "sneaked it in there."

Nameplates are eliminated starting with the 2010 season, and player NOBs are now direct sewn.

This sleeve patch replaces the "SF" disc in 2011.

Press Release February 24 2010 7:33 PM EST

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz.—The Giants' alternate jerseys are back. Managing general partner Bill Neukom confirmed Wednesday that the team will wear orange tops for every Friday night home game. The front of the jerseys will feature the Giants' familiar block lettering. In the late 1970s and early '80s, the Giants wore orange alternate uniforms bearing the club's script logo...

… The Giants last wore alternate jerseys in 2002, when they donned black tops for some road games. They hadn't worn alternate jerseys at home since 2001, when they broke out black tops every Friday night.

Neukom also said that the Giants will wear alternate, orange-billed caps for Sunday home games, duplicating a look which the team sported from 1977–82.

The fresh splashes of orange are consistent with the Giants' black socks, which now include three bold horizontal lines near the top. It's actually less of an innovation and more of a "retro" look. The Giants last sported striped socks in 1948, when they played in New York.

For the 2012 season, the Giants make some subtle changes to their road jerseys. The black/orange/gold drop shadow remains the same, but the orange/black/orange sleeve braid moves up slightly from the end of the sleeve, and the braid around the neck of the previous version is replaced by black knit trim on the neck and placket.

Between 2012 and 2023, the jersey is made in three different constructions: full knit, Cool Base, and Flex Base (all shown here). From 2020–2023, it is made on Nike's version of the Flex Base template. A gray version of the Giants' team disc patch appears on the left sleeve throughout this run.

The Giants introduce a slightly revised version of their 1983–1993 road jersey, now as a road alternate starting with the 2012 season. Notice the narrow gold drop shadow used on the front crest—this detail was not present on the originals.

At the time, the Giants are the only current MLB team to regularly wear two distinct gray jerseys. They are also the first team to wear two gray road jerseys in a single season since the 2006–2008 Texas Rangers wore a gray alternate vest for select road games.

The jersey features black knit trim on the placket and orange/black/orange trim at the sleeve ends. Back names and numbers match the style used on the team's regular road jersey. This style is discontinued after the 2019 season.

2014-2023 Alternate Home Orange

The 1977–1982 game jersey script makes a comeback on the revised orange jersey in 2014, with all lettering in black, white, and a gold drop shadow—a subtle detail, hard to see from more than a few feet away. The “SF” patch appears on the left sleeve in the same colors. Front numbers; black single-line placket and double-line sleeve-end trim.

Majestic manufactures these from 2014–2019. Nike takes over in 2020. Originally, these did not have player names on the back, but they were added in 2021 with the same black/white/gold drop shadow as the other lettering.

In January 2015, the Giants announce a new black alternate uniform dubbed “Fade to Black.” They debuted them on May 2, “Metallica Day” at the ballpark, and wore them for select home games after that.

It is based on the gray road alternate retro jersey introduced in 2012. All lettering on the jersey is black, outlined with orange. It also features a new sleeve patch with the word “Giants” curved under a depiction of the Golden Gate Bridge. Black alternates had last been worn in 2001–2002.

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, made from Cool Base fabric but with several elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, plus one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic claims is 10–20% lighter than traditional layered twill. The MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from earlier Cool Base jerseys.

2017-2023 Alternate Home Black

After two seasons of wearing the difficult-to-read "black on black" alternate jerseys, the Giants alter the look to replicate their 2016 Spring Training jerseys—making all lettering front and back orange with a black outline, and adding an orange drop shadow effect. The team bridge patch remains on the left sleeve. These jerseys are worn for Saturday home games.

Starting in 2021, player names are added to the back in orange/black/orange drop shadow. Majestic manufactures this style from 2017–2019; Nike takes over from 2020–2023

2021-2023 City Connect

San Francisco is foggy and the Golden Gate bridge is there. That sums up the Giants' City Connect jersey. But we do detail here, so let's dive in. White is a rarity as a base color for the City Connect line, but the color choice for these Nike Flex Base jerseys owes to the city's notorious fog. In that spirit, the front "G" logo and back numbers seem to ascend from the fog (like the Golden Gate itself) with lettering in orange-to-white gradient/white/gray. Names on back are a simpler orange/gray. Each sleeve is adorned with an orange rendition of the Golden Gate, again, manifesting out of the fog of... the ends of the sleeves. Finally, the Giants make use of the space above the jock tag for an applique reiterating their wordmark partly obscured by... you guessed it...patchy fog. One imagines that San Francisco has more to offer than what is represented here, and for a program intended to capture the imagination the Bay-area community, the San Francisco press dubbed this one "uninteresting, uninspiring, and underwhelming." A sponsor patch is added in 2023.

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020–2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Giants classic home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The gold drop shadow is also removed from the player name. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the Giants front lettering splits differently across the front, with the "N" closer to the seam of placket, which makes the lettering feel slightly imbalanced to the left in our eyes. Neck and sleeve-end trim are now sewn-in to their respective seams rather than sewn on top of the jersey itself. As such, both appear wider than in previous seasons. The Giants use perforated numbers on their home jerseys in 2024. Starting June 19, the team added a memorial patch for Willie Mays on the left chest of the jersey, and on June 29, added a similar patch in memory of Orlando Cepeda worn above the team sleeve patch. Early versions of the Mays patch look like embroidered, adhesive patches, while later versions, and all of the Cepeda patches, appear to be printed twill that is heat-pressed to the jersey.

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For the Giants, the gold drop shadow also returns to player names after a one-year hiatus. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. 2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. For the Giants, the gold drop shadow also returns to player names after a one-year hiatus. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. VPE’s placket remains narrow, so the “San Francisco” lettering breaks in the same place as in 2024. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

2025 City Connect 2.0

The Giants City Connect 2.0, released for the 2025 season, pay tribute to the area's rich musical history. The black jersey base features sublimated wave designs, representing sound waves and the grooves in a record. The front "Giants" script, in white/black/orange-violet gradient are meant to reflect the city's psychedelic music scene of the 1960s, a theme also carried through the groovy glove-shaped sleeve patch (the sponsor patch appears on the opposite sleeve, and patch sleeve locations vary based on player handedness). The violet color used in the lettering and gradient sleeve-end trim is a nod to the NY Giants, who wore violet from 1913-1917. "San Francisco" appears on a patch above the jock tag in a similar treatment to the "Giants" lettering, and a separate patch is sewn on the front right hem, opposite the jock tag, with nine icons representing styles of music that have built the city's music scene. Player name appears on black in orange. Overall, it is a much bolder statement than the team's City Connect 1.0, which had elements that literally disappeared into fog. One may argue that there was a fair share of fog in Haight-Ashbury in the late 60s, but this entry chooses to highlight the vibrant parts of the scene that shaped a generation and marked a turning point in American culture.

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1980-1982 Batting Practice

While the exact first year of use is uncertain, the front wordmark uses the inferior Alpha variant of the team's 1978–1982 wordmark (also seen on the initial iteration of the 1981-only black mesh jerseys) and is screened-on. Back numbers are also screened-on, using "stock" manufacturer lettering patterns. In the early 1980s, the Giants did not maintain the same quality standards for pregame jerseys as most other teams and appeared to accept whatever vendors provided.

For the second half of the 1983 season, the Giants wore orange mesh BP jerseys made by Alpha, which also supplied the crosstown Oakland A's. These jerseys were made of thin fabric and, according to someone present at the time, "felt and looked really cheap." Like the A's Alpha jerseys of the same period, the team logo and numbers are heat-pressed vinyl. The numbers are rather thick and shiny—unusual for a major league jersey.

In 1984, the team switched to white batting practice jerseys made by Sand-Knit.

1983 Road Batting Practice

These jerseys were cheap in both construction and logo design; anyone coming across one of them might think they came from the local Little League. But Alpha was a local supplier and may have provided them to the Giants at little or no cost for the publicity it might have brought.

These Alpha mesh jerseys appear to be the earliest Giants road BP jerseys, used around 1983, though more research is needed to confirm the exact dates. The front logo is screened-on, as are the back two-color numbers.

It's an educated guess, but we estimate the vintage based on the manufacturer's tag style, which dates from 1981–1984. We know that the Alpha jerseys were used in 1983, and that these came afterward. Sand-Knit offered far better jersey quality than the Alpha jerseys, but the front script and back numbers are still screened-on, not sewn. We are breaking these out here as a separate style, simply because of the screened-on team crest and numbers, which likely lasted only one year on this style.

Starting in 1985, the front wordmark and back numbers are now sewn-on tackle twill, and no longer screened-on.

The Majestic BP jersey shown at right is from 1985. We can determine its age based on the style of Majestic tag sewn on the tail, though it is not team-tagged. It is constructed from white mesh fabric with orange/white/black/white/orange knit striped sleeve ends, and only some have V-neck trim.

Custom Giants numbers in two-color black/orange; no player names are used. It is highly likely that these were mixed and reused from year to year regardless of manufacturer.

Wilson batting practice jerseys have been seen from 1986, Rawlings from 1987, and from 1988–1993, a mix of Sand-Knit, Rawlings, Majestic, and Russell.

Collectors should be aware that many Giants minor league jerseys are misrepresented as MLB jerseys, and they often look the same.

Majestic gray mesh jersey, all sewn-on with Majestic Varsity back numbers

As with the home white BP jerseys, multiple manufacturers were used during these years, with a few common features: gray jersey body; orange/gray/black/gray/orange knit striped sleeve ends; and a plain V-neck.

The front wordmark and back numbers are usually sewn-on tackle twill, though earlier Sand-Knit versions are screened-on. Custom Giants numbers in two-color black/orange, no names.

Although not date-tagged, the years of use can be inferred by the style of manufacturer tagging used on each.

Wilson produced the BPs in 1986; Rawlings in 1987. From 1988–1993, a mixture of Sand-Knit, Majestic, and Russell BPs were used.

Note that the Majestic jersey at bottom left is made from a lightweight solid fabric—not mesh.

Collectors should note that many Giants minor-league–issued jerseys are mistakenly sold as MLB jerseys. They often look the same.

Black jerseys became all the rage in the early 1990s, and nearly every team with black in its color palette (and several without) took advantage of it by issuing some form of black jersey. The Giants adopted this black-on-black BP jersey for 1993 only, with all lettering outlined in orange.

The jerseys we have found in this style are made by Russell. Player names appear on the back during the regular season (in vertical arch), but no names are seen in Spring Training photos.

The same orange/white/black/white/orange trim that was used on the white jerseys of 1986–1992 also appears on this style.

Early 1990s Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

Majestic offered this zip-neck, short elastic-waist pullover—called “The Gamewarmer”—to all teams in baseball from the mid-1980s to the early 1990s. Some teams (such as the White Sox and the Padres) used them heavily. Others used them rarely or not at all.

For 2001, the Giants re-introduce their alternate logo, introduced in the 1950s and last seen on their 1982 team uniforms. It is black outlined with orange and a gold 3D drop shadow. Numbers on back are the same larger size as found on the team's home game jerseys and are in the same three colors.

The shirt is made from a heavy black mesh and the sleeve ends are finished with orange and black striped sewn-in knit trim. MLB refreshed all teams' BP jerseys for 2014, but the Giants' changes were hardly noticeable. Back player names and numbers continued as before in the Giants' custom fonts, in three-color orange/black/gold drop shadow twill.

Read the full story on MLB's new-for-2016 Spring Training jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

Daniel Jackson Collection

For the first time, in 2016 MLB introduces a jersey specific to Spring Training intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template, and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team.

The Giants use a black jersey with orange knit trim around the neck and placket and orange/black/orange trim on the sleeve ends. At first glance, it may look just like their home black alternate, but all of the lettering style is distinct to this jersey. It bears a single-color "SF" logo on front, orange patterned twill/black/orange drop shadow name (not the "hollow" version present on the alternate) and back numbers, and no left-sleeve patch. The jersey also features a rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate Highway sign, reading "2016" and "AZ" representing where the Giants spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017, with some minor design modifications. As in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template, and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before.

The Giants again use their regular season black alternate home jersey as a basis for their Spring Training jersey (this year, with the bridge patch on the left sleeve). The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “AZ” representing where the Giants spend Spring Training.

2017-2019 Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets (which are void of player identification) instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made from Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tails of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Giants jersey is black with black back and underarm gussets. The "SF" logo from their caps appears on the front left chest in orange/black/gold drop shadow. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in orange/black/gold drop shadow in Varsity variant on the left sleeve.

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts, but now simplified using only one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns.

The Giants use their regular-season black alternate home as their base with a name added on back. The name and back numbers are sewn on in orange patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "AZ" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns.

The Giants use their regular-season black alternate home, but with a name added on back, as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "ARZ," referencing their Spring Training home. The back numbers are orange/black/orange drop shadow, while the name on back is orange.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Spring Training

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season.

For this iteration, the Giants use their regular-season black alternate home jersey with orange/black/orange drop shadow back numbers with an orange name added on back (player names not present on regular season jerseys). For 2021, the player names are updated to orange/black/orange drop shadow to match the change to the identical home alternate jerseys. In 2023, the sleeve patch is removed.

May 3, 1992: The Giants called on Russell to reproduce their red, white, and blue uniforms from the 1942 wartime era, and played the similarly attired 1942 Phillies at home.

These TBTC uniforms were made from double-knit material, not old-fashioned flannel, but the lettering was made of felt. An original 1942 uniform is shown at bottom right for comparison.

May 31,1992: The Giants wore Rawlings-made knit replicas of their 1939 New York Giants road gray uniforms for a game in Pittsburgh against the Pirates. They were made of gray double-knit with royal blue trim and felt lettering.

Compared to an original 1939 road jersey at lower left, the design is fairly accurate, except that the “NEW YORK” on the front is slightly too tall.

The back number is Block font instead of the correct McAuliffe-style “Red Sox” font. The newspaper photo above incorrectly labels the uniforms as from 1938. The Baseball Centennial sleeve patch was worn by all MLB teams in 1939.

Mitchell & Ness double-knit jerseys were worn in a TBTC game on June 6, 1999. The versions made for the game have a small felt tag sewn on the lower left shirttail, lettered with "T.B.C. 6-5-99." The game was played against the A's, who also wore period-specific uniforms.

These jerseys are surprisingly inaccurate. Most notably, the Giants logo is poorly rendered compared to the originals. Steve Sale, a friend and former tailor for the Oakland A's, informs us that this bastardized version of the Giants script was "invented" by Alpha Sporting Goods for use on the Giants' early screen-printed batting practice jerseys. As poorly as it was drawn, it remains with us today.

The player number font used is not the correct Varsity Standard; instead, the font "Block with Serifs" (as used by the modern Twins) is used. The NOB is too small and should follow the Giants' Vertical Arch style, but does not.

2002 Turn Back the Clock to 1951 New York Giants

Delayed a year because of the 9/11 tragedy, the Giants and Dodgers finally had their Turn Back the Clock game on July 28, 2002, commemorating the Giants' victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers to win the 1951 NL Pennant on Bobby Thomson's famous "Shot Heard 'Round the World."

Thomson himself attended a pregame ceremony, wearing one of the Mitchell & Ness jerseys, tagged "9-16-01," originally made for the game the year prior. It is unclear if the 2002 game jerseys were the same set or a new batch, but they were made from old-fashioned wool flannel and closely matched the 1951 originals, down to the NL anniversary patch on the left sleeve.

The Dodgers declined to play along, wearing their regular uniforms. This commemorative event is famous in Giants history, but not fondly remembered by the Dodgers—still bitter even 51 years later.

A newspaper report noted the throwback uniforms but commented: "The differences between the old togs and San Francisco's regular retro-styled uniforms were barely noticeable." Someone who did notice, however, was Giants starter Jason Schmidt. After his jersey repeatedly came untucked during the first inning, he changed into his standard home uniform for the remainder of his appearance.

Swisher's ninth-inning RBI triple rallies A's past Giants

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) -- Although Barry Bonds showed he still has a spring in his step, with his first stolen base in nearly two years, the Oakland Athletics bounced back a whole lot better than the San Francisco slugger's legs.

San Francisco took two of three from the A's at the Coliseum last month in the opening leg of the Bay Bridge Series -- and Bonds hit his 714th homer, tying Babe Ruth for second place on baseball's career list. Until Bonds' sprint around the bases, the atmosphere was more entertaining than the baseball on '80s Night. Both teams wore the loud, softball-style uniforms of their 1982 counterparts, and the Giants welcomed back Crazy Crab, the human-sized crab mascot introduced at Candlestick Park in 1984 as a sarcastic protest against mascots.

Bonds looked sharp in his deer-hunter-orange top, but he had two fielding misadventures in the early innings. He made up for them with an impressive catch to end the sixth, backhanding Antonio Perez's fly on a dead run.

Schmidt moved up two spots on San Francisco's career strikeouts list during the game, passing Mike McCormick (976) and Bobby Bolin (977). Schmidt is 10th overall in franchise history. ... After the game, players from both teams signed their retro jerseys and gave them away for an online charity auction.

June 23: Majestic created these beautifully accurate replicas of the Giants' 1977–1982 orange alternate pullovers for a Turn Back the Clock game vs. the Oakland A's: "'80s Retro Night." The Giants' current player name and number lettering font is used instead of the correct font from the originals, but at least they got the front script right this time, using the same patterns as for the team's 2003–2006 batting practice jerseys. Players wore them inappropriately baggy, but sadly, we are used to that by now.

Again, they are good, but not quite perfect copies of the Wilson originals from 1978–1982. The numbers used are the same as the Giants' current numbers, not the correct Wilson Varsity font used in those earlier years. Names on back use the current name font and are not properly vertically arched, and the sleeve end trim is too wide. But the front logo is satisfyingly correct. Players in the 1978–1982 era wore their uniforms skintight; players in 2008 wore them like pajamas. June 2, 2012: The Giants invited the Cubs for this event, billed as "Turn Back the Century." Majestic knit replicas of the 1912 uniform are white with navy pinstripes, have a blank front, and only an interlocking "NY" on the sleeve. Player numbers on the back are in simple Block font, though players in 1912 did not wear numbers. The jersey features a double-layered, "sun collar" that was common on baseball uniforms until the early 1930s.

"TURN BACK THE CLOCK … The Giants and Cubs wore replica uniforms from 1912 today … Some elements from today's turn-back-the-century game include

- The scoreboard had a vintage look, and videos were not shown.
- There was a roving barbershop quartet outside the gates
- Giants photographers, ushers, security guard, groundskeepers, and other staff wore 1912-era garb.
- Only organ music was played the entire game." (San Francisco Giants press release)

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1924 New York Giants

Steve Kraljic collection

July 5, 2012: The Giants visited the Washington Nationals, and wore 1924-style gray pinstriped uniforms. Modern numbers (in Varsity style) added to the back. Note the red detail in each point of the team logo. Okkonen's research shows this jersey as a one-year-only design and suggests it is one of two worn on the road (an early "road alternate" perhaps). Ironically, the Giants were the only team in 2012 with a road alternate jersey in their lineup.

May 27, 2013: MLB dictated that all teams would wear camouflage-lettered jerseys for their Memorial Day games. The Giants uniforms were perhaps the worst example of this plan. Desert tan camouflage lettering outlined with orange and gold drop shadow, then placed on a light-gray background, proved to any doubters why camouflage is used to effectively make things invisible. These Giants uniforms looked all but blank from only 10 feet away.

2014 Negro Leagues Tribute (1946 San Francisco Sea Lions)

May 3, 2014: Visiting the Atlanta Braves, the San Francisco Giants dressed in the uniforms of the 1946 San Francisco Sea Lions of the Negro Leagues. They wore historically accurate gray uniforms that confusingly included a patch of a bear cub on the front. It was reported that the 1946 Sea Lions purchased and reused the uniforms of another defunct Negro League club, leaving the patch from the prior team in place. These uniforms are made from knit fabric, but have a reasonably convincing flannel "pattern" printed on them. Navy Varsity numbers on back; orange and navy knit trim on the placket, around the collar and at the sleeve ends, and on top of the shoulders.

2014 Memorial Day

May 26, 2014: Only slightly better than the 2013 effort, the Giants' home uniforms for Memorial Day 2014 featured desert camouflage lettering outlined with orange and gold drop shadow on a cream-colored background. Player numbers, but no names on back, as is the Giants' standard for home jerseys.

2015 Gold Program

April 18, 2015: To celebrate their third World Series championship in five years, the Giants again bring out gold-trimmed uniforms for their ring ceremony. These cream-colored Majestic Cool Base jerseys are something of a hybrid of the home and home alternate jerseys, with gold added for good measure. The front and back lettering is all metallic gold/black/orange drop shadow, with the Giants' patch on the left sleeve. 2014 World Series Champs patch on the right sleeve, and the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on back collar, are also outlined in gold (on the regular uniforms, both have a white border). The LON memorial patch is above the team disc on the left sleeve, as it was on their typical jerseys.

2015 Memorial Day

May 25, 2015: The Giants bring back camo for Memorial Day. Essentially identical to the 2013 Memorial Day jerseys, this set sports the 2014 World Series Champs patch on the right sleeve, in place of the 2012 World Series Champs patch on the 2013 version. As with the 2013 take on this look, this jersey's lettering disappears almost completely; another example of style trumping function. The LON memorial patch does not appear here. The MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the collar is dark green/khaki/white in 2015, rather than its typical team colors from 2013 and 2014.

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of the team's normal color palette. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys, which makes the orange in the jersey trim clash sharply with the rest of the decoration. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Giants wear their road gray jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in red, including the front logo as well as back numbers. Two-layer twill replaces the usual three-color lettering on the jerseys. Player names on back are in red. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

2016-2017 Hispanic Heritage

May 5 and September 17, 2016 & September 16, 2017: The Giants once again turn into the "Gigantes." Other than being applied to the new Flex Base template, these jerseys are identical to the Gigantes jerseys of years past. The 2016 entry also includes the Monte (Monte Irvin) and Davvy (Jim Davenport) memorial patches that are on the Giants' other jerseys that season. The style returns for 2017 without the memorial patches.

2016-2017 Mother's Day

May 8, 2016 and May 14–15, 2017: In 2016–2017, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms on Mother's Day. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days). The Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink, and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Giants wear a white version of their typically cream home jerseys, with the front logo lettering in pink with dark gray outlines. Back numbers are pink/dark gray. None of the lettering carries the usual, subtle drop shadows. The team's left-sleeve patch is also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim—normally orange/black/orange—becomes dark gray. The team's two memorial patches for Monte Irvin and Jim Davenport remain on the right sleeve. The style returns in 2017 without the memorial patches on the right sleeve.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Giants apply the camouflage trimmings to their road gray jerseys for the game on May 30. The three-color front lettering and back numbers are rendered in two-color woodland camo with a black outline (no drop shadows), and player names appear in single-color black. Like other teams, their left sleeve patch is reduced to shades of green, gray, and black; sleeve trim elements are also simplified to single-color black from the usual orange/black/orange. The team's two memorial patches for Monte Irvin and Jim Davenport remain on the right sleeve.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1978

For two road games (June 18 against the Rays, and July 20 against the Red Sox), the Giants throw back to their 1978 orange jerseys (both opposing teams also wore throwbacks; the Rays, their “Fauxbacks” and the Red Sox, 1975 home uniforms). This is the fourth time the Giants have resurrected this style, and this Majestic knit pullover is a decent recreation of the original, except for the radial arch name on the back, which should be vertical arch instead.

2016-2017 Father's Day

June 19, 2016 and June 17–18, 2017: In 2016–2017, all teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms on Father's Day. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction, with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days); the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal/light blue/white. The only team to buck the trend of replacing their main lettering color with light blue, the Giants wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in orange with light blue outlines. (Perhaps the light blue was too close to Dodger Blue—the signature color of Giants' longtime rivals, dating to their time together in New York?) The player names on back are rendered in single-color light blue; back numbers are orange/light blue. None of the lettering carries the usual, subtle drop shadows. The team's left sleeve patch is also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally orange/black/orange on sleeves and black around the placket, becomes light blue. The team's two memorial patches for Monte Irvin and Jim Davenport remain on the right sleeve. The style returns for 2017 without the memorial patches.

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Giants are at home and wear their home jerseys, although this version is white; the standard Giants home jersey has a cream base. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill, and the Giants select the red twill version with blue outlines to replace their three-color front lettering and back numbers; there are no drop shadows on this version. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. New for 2016: team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue, replacing team colors, and all jersey trim—normally orange/black/orange—becomes single-color red. The team's two memorial patches for Monte Irvin and Jim Davenport remain on the right sleeve, but are oriented horizontally over the flag patch, rather than vertically as usual.

2019

The Giants wear Gigantes jerseys annually at home but had not worn a road version of the style since 2009, until wearing it twice in three years on May 5, 2017 and July 13, 2019. Otherwise identical to their standard road jersey, save for the modification of the Spanish team name on front, these gray Majestic Flex Base jerseys were mostly indistinguishable from the regular set, especially to the opposing teams' fans. In 2019, the jersey carried the "Peter" and "Stretch 44" memorial patches atop the MLB150 patch on the right sleeve as the rest of the team's jerseys did.

2017 Memorial Day

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Giants apply this style to a white version of their typically cream home jerseys on May 27–29, 2017.

2017 Independence Day

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill—appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 1–4, 2017, the Giants wear their road gray jersey with red patterned twill/ blue front logo lettering and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color blue. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color red.

2017 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017, the Giants wear jerseys with gray bodies and orange sleeves with white nicknames and orange numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide orange/white/orange trim. The front features their home jersey lettering, here rendered in orange/white/black drop shadow kiss-cut lightweight twill.

2018 St. Patrick's Day

Some teams do things their own way. When most teams wore blue lettering on Father's Day, the Giants wore orange. When many teams adopt a standardized template for St. Patrick's Day jerseys, the Giants wore orange again. Bucking the trend of white/gray lettering on the Majestic Flex Base green jerseys, in 2018, the Giants simply recolor their black alternate jersey with a green body, keeping the rest of the orange/black/orange drop shadow lettering on front logo and back numbers, the left-sleeve patch, and placket and sleeve trim intact, and adding player names on back in…what else? Orange. They did maintain the league-wide right-sleeve shamrock and green MLB logo on the back of the collar, but one senses they didn't have a choice about them. Orange and kelly green together, particularly these shades, make for a very confusing combination for the eyes, especially in the sun of a Spring Training game. They are memorable, however. If you look at them long enough and close your eyes, you'll still be able to see them.

2018 Memorial Day

The 2018 Memorial Day jerseys repeat the design pattern of 2017, with dark olive green/black front lettering and numbers accompanied by solid-color black player names on back. The outlines are nearly impossible to see, as the two colors are so close in hue to each other. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team-specific sleeve patches also are repeated from 2017 with an olive green and black treatment. Trim elements are again simplified to single-color black, and a green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the US military, is stitched to the right sleeve. The Giants apply this style to their road gray jerseys on May 26–28, 2018.

2018 Independence Day

The 2018 Independence Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017 featuring printed twill with a pattern of stars and stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the lettering - red/blue or blue/red - and the Giants go with a different option this year than last. The jerseys themselves are Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging, and a ChromaFlex rubberized “stars and stripes” pattern MLB patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 2–4, 2018, the Giants wear their road gray jerseys with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

2018 Players Weekend

Players Weekend returns for a second year; a promotion intended to highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans. Brightly-colored jerseys are worn on the field on August 24–26, 2018, and once again, the Cool Base pullover jerseys are based on youth league designs with a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people with handwritten messages. Both the patch, and the back-of--collar logo, feature an adaptation of the MLB logo showing the evolution of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic and set tags appear on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. The Giants wear jerseys with black bodies and orange sleeves with white nicknames and orange numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide orange/black/orange trim. The front features their home jersey lettering, here rendered in orange/white kiss-cut twill.

2018 right sleeve

After many years of standard home versions of their Gigantes jerseys, and even a few road gray instances, the Giants go all-in on their black alternates for the team's salute to Hispanic heritage on September 16, 2018 and September 14, 2019. Aside from the updated front logo, changed from "SF" to "Gigantes," these are identical to the typical black alternate set in every way. The 2018 version carried the team's 60th anniversary in San Francisco patch on the right sleeve, while the 2019 entry displayed the "Peter" and "Stretch 44" memorial patches atop the MLB150 patch on the right sleeve as the rest of the team's jerseys did.

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Giants wear a black version of their home jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in black/gray with gray nickname on back.

2021-2023 Hispanic Heritage

The Giants update their special “Gigantes” jersey at the same time they make changes to the regular-season alternate it is based on. Now made by Nike rather than Majestic, this iteration included player names on back in orange/black/orange drop shadow, making all the lettering match in style. It is worn on September 18, 2021, and on May 5 and September 18, 2022.

The 2023 version is worn five times with different sleeve patch variations. On April 29, 2023, for the Giants game against the Padres in Mexico City, it has the MLB World Tour Mexico City Series patch on the right sleeve and a Banorte sponsor patch on the left, omitting the bridge patch and that year’s Gaylord Perry memorial patch. On May 5, it has the Gaylord Perry memorial patch on the right sleeve. On June 4, 2023, the Vida Blue memorial patch is added with the Perry patch on the right sleeve. For games on August 12 and September 30, 2023, the Perry and Vida patches are moved above the bridge patch on the left sleeve, and the right sleeve bears a sponsor patch.

2021-2024 Negro League Sea Lions Home

On June 19, 2021, July 17, 2022, August 26, 2023, and June 20, 2024, the Giants bring out a home version of a jersey they wore on the road in 2014, the 1946 San Francisco Sea Lions of the Negro Leagues. The cream uniforms confusingly included a patch of a bear cub on the front, despite the team's name. It was reported that the 1946 Sea Lions purchased and reused the uniforms of another defunct Negro League club, leaving the patch from the prior team in place. These Nike jerseys in Cool Base material have numbers on back in a Varsity variant (that looks a little like a squared-off McAuliffe) in navy; orange/navy/orange knit trim on the placket, around the collar and at the sleeve ends, and on top of the shoulders.

The 2024 game took place at historic Rickwood Field, the oldest professional ballpark in the United States and former home of the Birmingham Black Barons of the Negro Leagues. The jerseys for that day also included a memorial patch for Willie Mays, who had passed away two days prior, and unfortunately, the team's ad patch, though credit for using an old version of the sponsor logo to try to fit the theme.

2024: All Players Wear 24 for Willie Mays Tribute

Right: Note the player number written by hand in marker to identify which player should get this jersey.

Willie Mays was a baseball legend, and was revered by Giants fans for his 20 seasons with the franchise and his impact on the sport. A "Forever Giant," he served as a de facto ambassador for the team until his death on June 18, 2024. For the Giants' first home game after Mays' death, all Giants uniformed personnel wore his number 24 for a game against the Cubs, appropriately, on June 24, 2024.The jerseys were standard Giants Vapor Premier Elite home jerseys, all with number 24 and no name on back. The jersey numbers were done in perforated twill. The team's Mays memorial patch, introduced a few days prior, was on the left chest. The jerseys were auctioned after the game with proceeds going to San Francisco charities in Mays' name. Fittingly, the Giants wore these jerseys as they rallied down two in the ninth to come back for a walk-off win.

Prototypes and Oddballs

1972 Prototype Home

This Wilson jersey found for sale is probably a prototype sample made for team consideration for the 1973 season. Notice the detailed specification tag sewn into the back of the neck, typical of prototypes. The front wordmark looks to be identical to what Wilson offered and the team adopted on its first knits, color-reversed from the then-current 1972 flannels and tweaked in shape. The back numbers are the standard Wilson Varsity font and are different from the variation the team eventually adopted. The Giants also added player names on back for the first time with their switch to knits.

1972 Prototype Road

We have seen (and featured) several other 1972 Giants prototypes, and clearly, the team was considering many options when making the switch from flannels to double-knit. Here is an example of a knit prototype road uniform made by Spalding. Wilson had made the flannel road uniforms that the Giants wore through the 1872 season, and this sample mirrors that style closely, with a slightly different number font on back. By the time the team adopted knit road uniforms in 1973, Wilson had been chosen as supplier, and the color of all the lettering flipped to orange/black, so this sample captures a style and manufacturer the team passed over.

Right: The Giants' 1972 road flannel,made by Wilson, which they used all season. Note the difference in back numbers vs. the Spalding sample. The Giants did not wear knit road uniforms until 1973, thought they stayed witfh Wilson, and made minor changes from their final flannels.

1972 Prototype Pullover

Shown here is a sample made up for the Giants of a pullover road jersey. Made by McAuliffe in 1972, in advance of the team's switch to double knit road jerseys in 1973, this design was not adopted by the team. It was offered for sale by the son of the team's then-manager Charlie Fox, with the following text excerpted from the description:

"This is the prototype pullover jersey for 1972 SF Giants...My father, Charlie Fox, was the manager of the Giants in 1972. The team had this one jersey made by McAuliffe Uniform Corp., to determine if they would switch from button down to pullover style...When the decision was made to not adopt this style during spring training 1972, I was given the jersey by the equipment manager (Eddie Logan)."

McAuliffe made jerseys for the Giants from the flannel days through 1976. By the time the team adopted pullover jerseys in 1977, McAuliffe was out of the picture and Wilson took over as manufacturer.

1977 Prototype Road Orange/Black

Top row: The switch to double-knits and pullovers meant a break with tradition for the Giants, and this orange road jersey was one marker of that shift. Though the Orioles introduced an orange jersey year before, theirs was an alternate jersey. The Giants took orange and ran with it, making it their primary road jersey. The experiment only lasted one year, but from this prototype, it is clear that the team wanted to see this jersey "in the cloth" before making such a bold decision. Though no back lettering is present, the front design, as well as the neck and sleeve trim, mirror what the team wore on the field that year. The small tag, sewn in the neck under the size tag, is the telltale sign that this jersey is a sample.

Bottom row: The black jersey lacks prototype tagging and has an odd Wilson neck tag variant that is seldom seen. It may be a prototype, or it may simply be a fan creation. The Giants would introduce a black road/alternate jersey for the first time in 1978, the following season.

1978 Last Minute Change?

This page from a Wilson trade magazine ad, touting the MLB teams under their uniform contract. Judging from the array of photos, this was from around December 1977, and surely it was aimed at college and high school teams, trying to win their business for the spring season. Supplying uniforms to the pros was likely a loss-leader for Wilson in those days; there was no ability to market pro jerseys to the public (and frankly, almost no demand for them then, in the different world we lived in). Wilson made their money on the semi-pro and school teams that bought based on their reputation serving the pros.

Notice that Wilson did not have home/road contracts with all teams. In fact, most teams split their orders; with perhaps home uniforms being supplied by Wilson, road ones by Rawlings or Sand-Knit.

And look closely— the 1977 uniforms are shown for all teams EXCEPT the Padres home (bottom row left) is the 1978 design. The white Phillies jersey is the 1972–1974 design. The front lettering on the road Phillies is placed far too low. And—-oddest of all—the Giants pullover shown was never worn. The 1977 Giants wore the slanted, cursive Giants script (1977–1982) and Wilson also supplied the one-year style 1977 Giants road orange jersey that had the arched “San Francisco” on the front. My guess is that contract was not yet finalized when this ad ran.

1985-1986 Giants First Name(s) on Back(s)

Pitcher Vida Blue played for both Bay-area teams in his career. During his time on the colorful Oakland A's of the 1970s, he and other A's players were encouraged to wear names other than their last names on their jerseys. Blue opted for "Vida," which was also his father's name, in his dad's honor. He carried the tradition across the Bay when he played for the Giants, as seen in his 1985 jersey here.

His teammate Chili Davis also broke out a "first name on back" jersey for the 1986 All-Star game. Blue was not on that All-Star squad, and it does not appear that Davis did this in the regular season at any time, so it seems unlikely that they both wore their first names on the same team at the same time.

Pre-1994 Prototype Road

Preparing for the 1994 redesign of their uniforms in 1993, the Giants got very close to finalizing a road jersey that had the logo colors reversed from what was used. The prototype used orange "San Francisco" lettering outlined with black, like the color scheme used on the team's 1973-1976 road jerseys.

How close did they get? Close enough that (new) official uniform maker Russell made hundreds (thousands?) of them in readiness for 1994.

Gary Clem of Center Star Sports in Texas was involved in lettering the team's jerseys then. He recalls these surplus jerseys being cut apart to make nameplates, pants patches, and whatever else -- if not just discarded. Years ago, these were seen commonly at card shows and for sale on eBay but seldom seen today.

The jersey above is from my collection. Note that the "Diamond Collection" tag on the front has been given a black mark, the common practice of the maker to deface the jersey before sending it to the discount outlets. This jersey is also size 46, an in-between size made for team use only and not commonly sold in retail stores. Gary Clem of Center Star Sports lettered this one for me, using the proposed "reverse" color scheme. I think it looks pretty nice. I would have liked to see them use it.

Oddballs

https://www.nytimes.com/1992/11/11/sports/baseball-look-what-wind-blew-back-baseball-s-giants.html

New York Times* SCOTTSDALE, Ariz., Nov. 10, 1992: National League club owners today soundly rejected a move of the San Francisco Giants to St. Petersburg, Fla., handing the Tampa Bay area its seventh setback in seven attempts to attract a major league baseball team. The owners, in a secret ballot that required 10 votes for approval, voted 9-4 against allowing Bob Lurie, the Giants' owner, to sell the team for $115 million to the Tampa Bay group, which would have moved the Giants to the Florida Suncoast Dome in time for next season.

These screen grabs from a 1992 CBS "60 Minutes" story show proposed mock-ups for the Tampa Bay Giants. We doubt these advanced beyond the drawing board to the cloth.

Potential Oddball: "Santa Clara Giants" Jerseys?

In the mid-1980s there was a ballot proposal to move the Giants to Santa Clara CA. It was so close to passing, the team made up "Santa Clara Giants" jerseys to see how they would look (or perhaps to scare the San Francisco legislature?) I have never seen pictures of a mock-up of one, but perhaps someone else has?

1976 Toronto Giants

From theathletic.com: Re-creation of the never unveiled Toronto Giants uniform from 1976, digitized by Cameron Walker, son of original designer Richard Walker. “It is from the sketches I gave him a few years ago from memory,” Richard Walker said. “He took the liberty of going further and putting it on uniform which was actually never done but may be interesting.” (Courtesy Richard Walker).

Baseball weaves history into its uniforms — even for the Toronto Giants

By Marc Carig, April 27, 2020, theathletic.com

On a February evening in 1976, Toronto’s power brokers prepared for the culmination of a years-long effort to land their own baseball team. The Giants, once a jewel of the National League, had become a bankrupt laughingstock. Now, they were about to flee San Francisco for Canada’s largest city, where the new owners were eager to trumpet their imminent arrival into the big leagues. The time had come to unveil the logo that would grace the new uniforms.

“There was never much thought given to being creative or Canadian,” recalled Richard Walker, the designer who was tasked with adapting a traditional look. The Giants’ familiar orange and black wordmark, which had origins dating back to the team’s years in New York, was modified slightly so that the letters “G” and “S” were enlarged. That created a natural space above for the addition of the word “Toronto.” The orange cap insignia, formerly an interlocking “SF” arranged diagonally, was changed to a “TG.”

Local officials were confident. One even posed for a photo at Exhibition Stadium, recently renovated to lure a new team. He stood in the snowy ballpark, arms outstretched, triumphant grin framed by the collar of a fur-lined coat. He wore a generic cap that featured the letter G; the real insignia and uniform logo would be saved for the big reveal. But 15 minutes before it began, Walker said, a telegram arrived with stunning news. An eleventh-hour deal had been reached to keep the Giants in San Francisco. “And that was the end of that party,” said Walker, whose designs were meant to be the centerpiece of the announcement.

Another iteration of the Toronto Giants proposed logo, the top from letterhead in the Canadian Baseball Hall of Fame, the bottom on a pin belonging to sportslogos.net founder Chris Creamer. These differ significantly from what is shown at left. The reality of what may have been worn on the field if the Giants had moved north of the border may have been somewhere in between… or neither.

1994 Darryl Strawberry's Special Sleeves

When putting player names on the back of jerseys, I always look on the Internet photos of the player in action, which tells me how steeply his name on back was arched, and how high or low his numbers were sewn. Collector Mark Lum called out these photos of Strawberry playing for the Giants in 1994 (top row) Strawberry's nameplate is so long it would normally crosses the sleeve seams and spill over onto the sleeves of a raglan-style sleeved jersey like the Giants wear (Bottom row). Surveying game photos from 1994, Lum noticed that Strawberry seemingly alone is wearing jerseys with "sewn on" style, not raglan style sleeves. (Confused? See the beginning of Chapter 2 where jersey construction is discussed).

Strawberry is also one of a couple Giants players who are issued Rawlings jerseys during the 1994–1999 period, not the standard Russell ones. Notice that his jerseys do not have the Russell "R" on the sleeve end.

I conclude that this was no accident, as the construction of the two styles is very different, and it appears on both his home and road jerseys; perhaps the star player preferred the fit of the sewn on sleeves? Or perhaps, he wanted to avoid his nameplate crossing over the seams onto his sleeves because it didn't look as good.

1994 Bobby Bonds Name on Back Font

Bobby Bonds was a San Francisco Giants legend who played for the team in the 1960s and 1970s, and returned to coach in the 1990s. He was also the father of Barry Bonds, another Giants legend in his own right. So one would think that they'd get his name right on the back of his home jersey...Instead, here he is in three photos from 1994, side-by-side with son Barry, showing that Bobby was somehow issued a jersey with a serif typeface name on back.

The Giants have never worn a serif typeface on their jersey backs, so it is especially surprising to see that it made the field for anyone. Sure, if he were a call-up player, or maybe a fill-in coach, these things may happen during a rush order at a local sewing shop. But he was already a coach with the Giants the year before. And he's Bobby Bonds. And, every time his son ended up at first base (which Barry did a lot), everyone in the ballpark could see them side-by-side, not matching. Go figure...

1999 Final Game at Candlestick

September 30, 1999: Former players were issued jerseys in the style that they wore during their playing days with the team, and they were worn in pregame ceremonies on the field at Candlestick, prior to the final baseball game played there.

Most likely this one is a souvenir from the event, made by Mitchell and Ness and date tagged for the game. The horrible "Alpha Company" bastardized version of the wordmark is used, one that inexplicably appears on other Mitchell & Ness jerseys attempting to represent the 1977–1982 era.

2009-2010 Prototype Batting Practice

The jersey on top is very close to what the Giants used for Spring Training and BP in 2009–2010, except for the lack of name on back. It is presented in a size 46, typical for samples of that era, with “8” on back, possibly representing that it was made in 2008.

It was offered by a seller along with the jersey on bottom, also without player name on back, as well as white drop shadow outlines on all letters and numbers rather than the gold the team opted for ultimately. This one, also a size 46, has an 0068 code on the laundry tag, also used on team issued and sample jerseys of this type.

More Oddballs

In 2004, Russell changed the place where the word “Giants” splits for the uniform’s buttons. Between 1983 and 2004, the word was split in the middle of the “A." In 2004, the spacing was altered slightly, so that the word splits neatly between the “A” and the “N," which is how it remained. Careful examination of 2004 game photos shows that some players were using leftover 2003 jerseys with the word split in the old spot.

Above: I just love this one, because it answers the question, “What happens if your name is so long it will never fit on the back of a jersey?” Here, the Giants have chosen a super-condensed version of their vertically arched NOB type font for William Van Landingham’s name. Now, I wonder what would have happened if he had played for the 1970s Reds …

2010-2011 Oops! Miscues

Quality control department: (clockwise from top) Note Edward Alfonzo's NOB misspelled, Eugenio Valez's creatively spelled "San Francicso" jersey, Randy Messenger appearing in his first game after being traded from the Marlins with without his player name on back, and Daniel Ortmeier's road jersey missing its team sleeve patch.

(Associated Press) HOUSTON -- Maybe they left his shirt in "San Fran-cic-so."

A Giant misspelling resulted in outfielder Eugenio Velez wearing a weird jersey Wednesday. A pair of letters were transposed in "Francisco."

So when Velez made his season debut in the seventh inning during a double switch, his uniform read "San Francicso." No one seemed to notice until well after the Giants' 10-4 win over the Astros.

"No, no, I didn't know," he told The Associated Press by cell phone from the team bus on the way to the airport. "That's the first I've heard."

"Increible!" the Dominican backup said in Spanish.

Velez is in his fourth year with the Giants. He walked and scored the final run against the Astros.

His teammates' jerseys were spelled correctly. The Giants said they would fix Velez's gray uniform before their next road game on April 16 in Los Angeles against the Dodgers. This was the second year in a row that a major league uniform spelled trouble.

Last April, Adam Dunn and Ryan Zimmerman of the Washington Nationals wore jerseys reading "Natinals" for three innings of a game. The company that made the uniforms apologized for the mistake.

2012 Road Prototypes

Photos: Gary Taylor

The Giants made some very subtle changes to their road jerseys in 2012, which focused mainly on slight changes to the jersey's trim. These two samples, however, show that they were considering a more comprehensive change that they ultimately rejected after seeing the designs "in the cloth."

Both jerseys are typical in their tell-tale sample attributes, both are size 46, have "PLAYER" and "12" for name and number (where "12" means "2012") and have sample tagging sewn inside the lower placket.

The top jersey sample tag reads "GIA-RD-D2-1-2012" meaning Giants Road design 2, version 1, 2012" This one has the "SF" logo on front as the team's road last had in 1993. This jersey looks to be a sample for their 2012 road alternate, which was similar, but had the gold drop shadow on the "SF" that this one lacks, and had black knit trim around the collar and placket as opposed to the orange/black/orange used here.

The bottom jersey's tag reads "GIA-RD-D3-3-2012" for Giants Road design 3, version 3, 2012." It features a black/orange "San Francisco" script used on the team's BP jerseys with matching black/orange lettering on back. Though the orange/black/orage trim matches the top jersey, it is limited to sleeve ends and neck openings. Ultimately, the team did not decide to use this style, which is unfortunate, as it is a very nice design.

2016-2019 Unused Turn Back the Clock

This jersey spotted for sale on-line has all the right characteristics for a late-2010s vintage Majestic full weight jersey, including the proper 62TB coded inside seam tag that is generally found on team-issue Turn Back the Clock jerseys. The sleeve logo matches the 2016–2019 style. But our records show no such game was played by the MLB Giants.

The sleeve end trim is characteristically inaccurate, but the wordmark is good. Perhaps this was a prototype for a game that was planned but never played.

2018 Sample Jackie Robinson Day

For MLB's league-wide celebration of Jackie Robinson Day in 2018, a new detail was added to each team's jersey. While all players on all teams still wore "42" without a name on the backs of their jerseys, a new patch with Robinson's retired number atop two crossed bats and a stylized baseball field design appeared on every players' right sleeve. The same patch returned for the 2019 season as well. But this prototype jersey makes clear that, even a small change, such as a new patch, is a big deal to uniform suppliers and teams.

This jersey's pedigree as a sample is apparent in a few details. First, it is size 46, a common sample size, and the "0730" code on the back of the laundry tag indicates it is a team-issued jersey. Further, it carries interior tagging with the tell-tale sample coding "GIA-JR-RJ-D1-1-2018" indicating it is version 1 (D1-1) of a 2018 Giants (GIA) road jersey (RJ) for Jackie Robinson Day (JR). The Giants were, in fact, on the road for Jackie Robinson Day on April 15, 2018, so it is likely that the road version of the jersey was selected as a test for that reason.

It seems odd, even unnecessary, to create a sample like this for something as small as the addition of a single sleeve patch. But since this particular initiative was a change from the prior year, it is likely that Majestic made these up as a "proof of concept," not only for their own production needs, but to show to teams for their review and approval. It is likely such samples were made for all MLB teams' jerseys, but this is the first of this type we've seen to turn up.

Special Tailoring Variations: Coach Alyssa Nakken

Nakken's debut jersey from July 23, 2020, a size 40.

Special tailoring is nothing new in baseball - players have long requested and received adjustments to sleeve length, jersey length, and tapering to name just a few. But with the debut of the Giants' Alyssa Nakken, the first woman to be a full-time coach in MLB history and the first to coach on-field in an MLB game, jersey tailoring took a new turn, less out of preference and more of necessity. However, at least in her first few seasons, Nike's approach to her jerseys has varied considerably. This survey is by no means exhaustive, but shows a range of jerseys that have made it to the hobby in recent years.

The jersey Nakken wore for her first game on July 23, 2020 is in the Baseball Hall of Fame. That road gray Nike jersey is listed as a size 40 in the Hall of Fame's artifact database, and has no other visible signs of special tailoring. Examples of two home jerseys issued in 2020, however, are discernibly different in construction, made of Cool Base material but without the Flex Base panels, and cut much shorter with a different silhouette. Both of these examples have an "XL" tag in neck, not seen in other team issue jerseys. One lacks the typical Nike tag with the QR code and sewing information, while the other includes it and sizes the jersey as W-XL, or women's extra large. Supply chain issues made sourcing everything difficult in 2020, so some inconsistency could be understandable that season. The next two seasons are another matter.

Available jerseys in the hobby show that Nakken was issued several of the custom-sized W-XL jerseys with the shorter length and different overall dimensions. The road jersey even appears to have smaller team-name lettering on front. However, at least one 2021 jersey in a standard Nike size 40 was also issued to her, odd given that other road jerseys in the W-XL exist, so it does not seem to be an issue of sourcing that style.

There is no clear reason why such inconsistencies would exist over the course of three seasons. At press time though, all 2022 and 2023 jerseys we found were made in size 40 with no apparent additional alterations, so the team seems to have settled on a consistent practice. As more women join Nakken in the ranks of professional coaches, perhaps a new standard will evolve to handle outfitting these pioneering women who are changing the face the game.

Above: Two jerseys issued to Nakken in 2022, both in standard size 40. No other alterations indicated on the tag for the black jersey (center).

This rare sample is not related to Alyssa Nakken specifically, but figures in to her story, and possibly to all other women who work as uniformed personnel in MLB. We noted on a previous page that new uniform standard would need to evolve to accommodate these pioneering women, and here we have evidence that at least some steps have been taken toward that goal. Here is a prototype jersey that carries all of the hallmarks of Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE), which premiered on-field in 2024, and in many respects is it much like the many other 2024 VPE samples throughout this book. However, so far, this is the only one we've encountered that was made specifically for women.

Note the difference in cut on this jersey from VPE jerseys made in men's sizes. Not unlike some of the women's jerseys Nakken wore early in her career, it is cut shorter, with shorter sleeves, and it more tapered on the sides. This one is a women's size large according to the wash tag, and it measures 20" from seam to seam under the arms, which is about equivalent to a VPE size 40, which is about 20.5" across. However, from the photos of this jersey compared to a VPE size 40 (Red Sox City Connect 1.0) it is clear that the cut is drastically different, despite the similar chest measurement.

Above: Though the chest measurement of this women's sample and a 2024 size 40 jersey are only 1/2 inch apart, the women's jersey is clearly cut with a much different pattern.

The tagging reinforces this as a sample made specifically for women. It reads "WOMEN'S 2024 JERSEY P1 SET-IN, RIB, CUFF, BF" WHERE P1 indicates it is one (of possibly other) samples. We assume that "Set-in" refers to the sleeve style, and it is likely "Rib" and "Cuff" refers to the neck and sleeve trim. "BF" is for "button front." There is also a small, handwritten "2" on the corner of the tag, which may indicate this is a second version of this style.

Separate paperwork included with the jersey shows that it was made in late 2022 for the 2024 season. What we don't know is if it was a response to women like Alyssa Nakken taking on-field roles with teams, or if Nike intended to make a line of authentic VPE jerseys for women to offer at retail. As of press time, we have not come across one of Nakken's game worn or team issued 2024 or 2025 jerseys to know if she wore this template, or if she continued to wear standard size 40 jerseys as she had in years past.

2021 Prototype City Connect

In advance of releasing their first City Connect jersey in 2021, the Giants were provided with this sample by Nike for approval. It matches the final jersey used on-field, so the team must have been pleased with it.

This jersey is built on Nike's version of Flex Base, as the team's original City Connect jerseys were upon release in 2021. As we would expect, the jersey uses "PLAYER" and "21" on back, where 21 stands for the year the jersey will be used. This practice is almost universal for Nike samples of the era. Note also the sample information that is on the Nike tag, which reads "GIA-AHJ-D1-1-2021", which means Giants Alternate Home Jersey, design 1, (version) 1, 2021. There is also a small, handwritten "1" on the corner of the tag, which many Nike samples of this era had, though the numbers differ.

The designation of this jersey as AH1 rather than "CC" for City Connect is interesting. Perhaps at the time this was made a year or two before release, the program had not yet been titled "City Connect" so the jersey was treated as an alternate before the umbrella branding was finalized. It seems unlikely that the Giants considered this a standard alternate, but that cannot be fully ruled out as unusual as it would seem.

Electrical Tape Oddballs

Cap'n Belt

Sometimes, jokes go a little too far, and on the way to a road game in Chicago on September 10, 2021, the Giants' Brandon Belt joked that he was the captain of the team. His teammate, Evan Longoria, made a quick alteration to Belt's road jersey, adding a captain's "C" in black electrical tape. But Belt took the next step and wore it for the game (where it took on a couple of different shapes as the game wore on). Belt, for his part, lived up to his new title, reaching base four times, scoring the game's tying run, and adding an two-run homer for insurance.

So well loved was the stunt that Belt repeated it - this time for pregame only, when he applied the electrical-tape C to his home jersey for the Giants' home opener on April 8, 2022. In true captain fashion, he entered the field on a boat. You can't make this stuff up.

Taking the L

What's the opposite of a captain's "C"? According to the Giants, it is a loser's "L". For a Spring Training game on March 23, 2022, Giants Steven Duggar and Austin Slater served as bat boys and both wore uniforms with huge, taped "Ls" on back. They earned this indignity for having lost the team's fantasy football league. Beyond the uniform embarrassment, both retrieved foul balls and brought fresh pearls out to the home plate umpire during the game.

La Stella vs. La Stella

Between 2021 and 2022, the back of Tommy La Stella's Giants jersey underwent two changes, one big and one small. First, he changed numbers from 18 to 8. Nothing unusual about that. However, the first "A" in his last name went from being a small capital A to a lowercase A. That's something not quite as typical.

According to the MLB Style Guide, the Giants did not have any lowercase letters in their character set, so the change must have taken a little work.

It appears that the update was also based on La Stella's preference, as he kept the lowercase A when he moved to the Mariners in 2023. That letter, however, looks more like an upside-down lowercase E than a lowercase A. The Mariners had no lowercase A in their character set, however, so once again, this must be a custom job. One that the Giants appear to have done much better than the Mariners.

Of note, "la" in Italian, used in this way, means "the." ("La Stella" translates as "the star.") Traditionally, it would be lowercase in a name, rendering La Stella as la Stella, and his name would be alphabetized under "S" vs. "L" because of this. These days, the letter is usually presented uppercase in names, despite years of tradition. Had the old practice been reflected here, we would have seen two lowercase letters together as a single word, which may have been an MLB first!

How Many Patches is Too Many?

Giants pitcher Kyle Harrison made his Major League debut on August 22, 2023. That season, in addition to their normal team logo patch, the Giants also had two memorial patches (Gaylord Perry and Vida Blue) and a sponsor patch. And with the addition of the “MLB Debut” patch for Harrison’s first appearance, he took the mound looking like a NASCAR driver, with patches crawling up his left pitching arm almost to his shoulder.

About a month later, Giants outfielder Tyler Fitzgerald made his Major League debut on September 21, 2023. He too had to deal with the panoply of patches. It didn’t seem to phase him, as he picked up his first MLB hit in the game.

2023 Prototype Alternate Road

While moving from their version of Flex Base to Vapor Premier Elite (VPE), Nike produced a series of samples as they worked through the process. We have seen a handful of 2023 Nike "Conversion Jersey" samples, shown throughout the book, that have had occasional small details that are best described as unexpected. This one we found for sale online is completely mystifying,

Given the details of this jersey, including the lower MLB logo on back, smaller player name lettering, the band of fabric around the neck opening, sewn-in sleeve-end trim, and perforated back numbers, it is clear it is an early VPE sample. The tell-tale "Giants" and "23" on back reinforce this as a prototype, intended for the 2023 season. Usually, "PLAYER" would stand in for the name on back, but we have seen rare occasions of a team name or just "NIKE" here. But, clearly, that's not the most unusual part of this one.

In contrast to the other samples we've seen that had a few slight style details changed, this "road" sample is unlike anything the Giants wore before or since. It is medium blue in color and includes the blue/white/royal blue sleeve trim of the home sample, more reminiscent of the Blue Jays than Giants. Several other conversion samples had that trim, so perhaps that was all that was available at the time. It also has a dark gray next trim, which has shown up, inexplicably, in some other samples too.

The jersey sports the team's typical "SAN FRANCISCO" road front lettering (which looks very,small here). All lettering, front and back, is black/orange/gold drop shadow, standard for their jerseys.

The heat-pressed inventory tag reveals some info, and leaves us with some mysteries. It reads "GIA 2023 ROAD CONVERSION JERSEY P1." There is also a small, handwritten "1" on the bottom corner of the tag. Here, "GIA" is a code Nike has used elsewhere for the Giants, and "2023 ROAD" is self explanatory. Other conversion jerseys we've seen had another 6-character code on the tag, which this one lacks. We haven't been able to decipher those yet, but maybe it explains what jersey base color to use, and its absence confused someone at the factory into using this blue shell? We're only half-kidding about that scenario.

It is hard to understand why this sample has so many aberrant (and abhorrent) details not only from the team's typical look, but also the other samples we've seen. The Giants' road gray jersey base is not unusual. If this were the cream home jersey, not having that base on-hand would be more understandable. Some of the odd choices of other samples are small enough that they could be interpreted as the team or Nike trying something new. But we have no good explanation for what we see here. We're just happy it never made it past this stage.

2024 Prototype Alternate Home Orange

RGVDEAL on eBay

Note the perforations on the front and back numbers on the sample. The Giants opted to use perforated numbers on their orange alternate jerseys in 2024.

In advance of the switch to Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) in the 2024 season, Nike made prototypes of jerseys on the new template for team review. By the point that these samples were made, teams had already seen some early drafts with many missing or incorrect details, just to get a sense of the materials and construction. However, many of the later samples, like the one shown here, were very close to what eventually appeared on the field in 2024. This Giants orange alternate version is one of those examples. In many ways it replicates the team's alternate jersey that they had worn for years, just carried over to VPE, which meant that things like the original sleeve-end trim was now sewn into the edge of the sleeve instead of on it, while front and back numbers on this sample are also perforated, which was an element of the team's final, on-field orange jerseys for 2024.

Note the sample information that is on the Nike tag, which reads "GIANTS ALT1 JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT", with 44 being the size, which was not typical in earlier Nike samples, which were usually size 46. Also, the designation of "regular fit" was something not commonly seen on jersey tags, so it may have indicated the intent to use "bucket sizing" on jerseys, where there were a handful of standard cuts in different proportions available to players rather than the specific customizations of years past. Nike's 2024 pants were also done in bucket sizing, which was very unpopular with players. It is unclear what the "DD4995-810" text on the front tag means. It is likely it is an internal production codes, as all 2024 samples we have seen have different codes in these spots that we have not yet deciphered.

2025 Prototype City Connect 2.0

The Giants enter City Connect 2.0 territory in 2025, with a completely new uniform that speaks to the music history of the city and region. Prior to unveiling the jersey in early 2025, Nike made up samples for team review, and this is one that appears almost identical to what the Giants wore on the field.

The details of the jersey itself are described earlier in this chapter, and this prototype conforms closely to them except for two details. First, because the prototype was likely made up at least a year or two in advance, the assumption by Nike was that the numbers would be perforated. We have seen many Nike samples that defaulted to perforated numbers (perhaps in an effort to get teams to go along with them). However, given the backlash to Nike uniforms in 2024, many teams reverted back to non-perforated numbers in 2025. When this jersey appeared on field during the season, it no longer had perforated numbers, and had much larger player name lettering, likely victims of the "market correction" against many of the reviled 2024 changes. The other change is that the sublimated "sound wave" pattern is not represented here. Perhaps it could not be added to a sample, or this version lacked it intentionally, but the final included it contrary to this prototype.

As we would expect, the jersey uses "PLAYER" and "25" on back, where 25 stands for the year the jersey will be used. This practice is almost universal for Nike samples of the era. Note also the sample information that is on the Nike tag, which reads "GIANTS CC JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT", with 44 being the size, which was not typical in earlier Nike samples, which were usually size 46. Here, "CC" stands for City Connect, and there is also a small, handwritten "1" on the bottom corner of the tag, something that many Nike samples of the year have, though the numbers differ. Also, the designation of "regular fit" was something not commonly seen on jersey tags, so it may have indicated the intent to use "bucket sizing" on jerseys, where there were a handful of standard cuts in different proportions available to players rather than the specific customizations of years past. Nike's 2024 pants were also done in bucket sizing, which was very unpopular with players. It is unclear what the "HM6959" text on the front tag means. It is likely it is an internal production codes, as all 2025 samples we have seen have different codes in these spots that we have not yet deciphered.

“Until There’s a Cure” Red Ribbon

In 1994, the San Francisco Giants hosted their first “Until There’s a Cure Day” for AIDS awareness – making the Giants “the first major professional sports organization to identify itself with the battle against AIDS” according to The New York Times. Each year since (except for 2021), the Giants have worn a red AIDS ribbon on their jerseys to mark the event. Over time, the appearance of the patch has changed, but in all cases, they were worn on the left chest of the jersey. Especially in earlier years, the adhesive patches sometimes fell off in-game, so not all players had them on all game. Starting in 1996, almost all of the Giants’ annual opponents also wore the patches. Where applicable, the opposing teams’ ribbons are indicated on their respective “Commemorative Patches” pages in this Guide.

The patch below is sometimes seen on the sleeve of 2003 jerseys offered for sale. This patch was designed for use but was never worn by the team. Stung by their hasty and painful World Series loss, the team decided not to wear them. Instead, these were simply sold in the Giants' gift shop. However, 2003 MVP Baseball game for Playstation2 shows the Giants wearing this patch on their uniforms! You read it here.

2023 Giants Advertising Patches

Home, Road, Home Alternate, Road Alternate

City Connect

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Giants struck a sponsor patch deal with Cruise, an autonomous car company. The patches first appeared on August 4, 2023.There are two versions of the patch. A threshold-shaped patch is used for the home, home alternate, road, and road alternate jerseys. A patch that only includes the car logo is used on the City Connect jersey, likely so it will interfere less with the bridge graphics on the jersey sleeves. (The car appears to be “driving” over the bridge when used in this context.)

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team’s normal logo patches remain on each jersey, on the opposite sleeve from the ad patch.

Negro League Throwback

The Giants were the first team to change patch sponsors, but did so only out of necessity. Cruise, the team's 2023 patch sponsor, lost its license to operate in California in October of 2023. Though the team initially announced that they sponsor patches would remain, they changed course prior to 2024 Spring Training.

Automaker Chevrolet (Cruise's parent company) stepped in as patch sponsor for the 2024 season. The patch first appeared in Spring Training 2024. The patch is a black rectangle with a white border and the Chevrolet logo in white, with the "EV" of the company's name in orange to promote electric vehicles. It appears on the home, road, orange alternate, and black alternate jerseys. The version on the first iteration City Connect jersey (2024) is smaller, with the same "Chevrolet" text but no company logo. However, for the City Connect 2.0 introduced in 2025, the standard Chevrolet patch used on other jerseys is used. The team used a old-time version of the sponsor logo on its Negro League throwback jersey in an attempt to match the time period of the uniform.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team's normal logo patches remain on each jersey, on the opposite sleeve from the ad patch.

Document of Restoration

San Francisco Giants 1972 #25 Road Jersey

Examination Date: August 20, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0820J02

This letter documents the research and restoration of a MLB jersey by William Henderson. It is not a letter of authentication.

Description: Wilson seven button bluish-gray flannel, San Francisco Giants road jersey. BONDS name tag in felt stitched in the back of the neck, Wilson size 40 tagging and 1972 year tag on the bottom left tail. SAN FRANCISCO arched on the front in black felt sewn over orange twill. As received, the jersey wore dissimilar and unoriginal numerals on the back, #25. Viewing the jersey on the light table even with the old numbers in place we could see that there were ghosts present beneath them. We removed both of the replacement numbers on back. Both were stitched on differently with different types of thread, and different types of stitching. The two was glued down hard while the five came off rather easily. Evaluating the jersey back on the light table we can see the ghosts of the original numbers 25 that are in the proper Wilson font. It also appears that another set of numbers were on the back, the first number appeared to be a four, and the second number was either a zero or a six, likely but not positively.

Restoration Performed: Using the light table I compared the ghosts to the 1972 Wilson font from my archives, and it was a perfect match. There was a great deal of glue and staining that needed to be cleaned underneath the number 25 which I did with dry cleaning solvent. I steamed the garment to remove most of the old stitching holes, then used the light table to place the new numbers. I re-created the numbers in their original style; black wool felt over medium orange tackle twill (Webster Frisco Orange). I lightly media blasted the orange twill to help it to match the front lettering's patina, and I stitched it in place using a slightly faded orange thread to match the stitching on the front. Below, at left as received, and at right as restored.

Conclusion: I believe I have accurately restored this jersey. I used the visible ghosts to recreate how it was originally lettered. I used the original style materials and stitching that matched the period Wilson patterns.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Willie Mays 1972 San Francisco Giants Manufacturer's Sample Road Uniform

Examination Date: July 5, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0705JP03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Gray double knit six-button road uniform consisting of jersey and pants, lettered for Willie Mays, #24. The jersey is size 42 gray heavyweight double knit with "SAN FRANCISCO" arched on the front in the team font in two-layer tackle twill lettering, black over orange. The player's number 24 is on the back in the same colors, and no player name on back is used. Orange/black/orange uniform braid trim rings the neck and is sewn 1" from the sleeve ends. The pants are size 32 with six belt loop tunnels, trimmed with the same orange braid down the side of each pants leg. The jersey is autographed by Mays on the lower left tail on blue ink. I have no professional opinion on the authenticity of the autograph.While they are both gray, the pants and jersey do not exactly match each other. The jersey is a slightly brownish cast; the pants are a lighter and brighter gray.

While nearly every other MLB team had switched to the new double knit uniforms for the 1972 season, the Giants were among a few stragglers who stayed with flannel uniforms for one final year. Midway through the 1972 season, the team introduced knit uniforms part time, but only at home. These new knit 1972 home uniforms ones faithfully copied the current flannels' look in every way. However the Giants wore their road flannels without change through the completion of the 1972 season. Notably, Mays was traded from the Giants to the Mets early in the 1972 season, and so never wore Giants knits, either at home or on the road.

This uniform is almost surely a manufacturer's sample, submitted by maker Spalding to the team for their consideration, likely before the start of the 1972 season. Once a major supplier of MLB uniforms, Spalding was at the end of its run in 1972, They supplied only the Brewers, Astros, Orioles and Yankees before disappearing as a MLB supplier at the end of 1972. It was common practice for manufacturers to submit uniforms like this, and they generally customized the uniform by using the name/number of either the team's manager or that of an established star.

bill@TheDream.Shop

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Felt strip tagging is sewn into the back of the neck with hand chain stitching: "Mays 24 42 72" (player #24, size 42, 1972), The pants have a similar waistband strip tag, "Mays 24 32 25 72" In this designation the 32 is the waist size and the 25 is the inseam. Spalding "Professional" white tags are sewn inside the waistband and on the outside left bottom of the jersey tail. The tagging is clean and unblemished.

Wear & Repairs: Both jersey and pants are crisp and do not display signs of game use. All stitching is tight and all trim and sewn elements are brightly colored and unpuckered. The jersey has a few dirty/discolored spots on it and shows the dusty cast of an item perhaps hung on display for a long time.

Conclusion: The uniform in review is in excellent unused condition, and as a manufacturer's sample uniform it is a wonderful piece of Major League Baseball history. It is pro lettered, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications as a sample uniform for the 1972 San Francisco Giants.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Will Clark 1986 San Francisco Giants Game Used Rookie Season Home Jersey

Examination Date: March 11, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0311J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: San Francisco Giants team tagged 1986 home jersey, white seven-button Wilson size 44 (marked and measured) with linen lining inside the placket for player comfort. Knit sleeve end trim in six-banded colors of orange, black and white. "GIANTS" arched on the front in layered twill: black over Frisco Orange in the team graphic style used 1983-1993. Bold player numbers "22" on back in the Giants' special font and in the same colors. As received, the nameplate was missing but its removal left a clear stitching outline.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson "Prestige Team" tagging introduced in 1986 is stitched to the lower outside left front tail. Pinch-sewn under its right side is a flag tab noting the size as 44. Centered beneath it is a zig-zag stitched square hand-chain stitched year tag, "86" in the familiar hand of the Wilson factor stitcher. 1986 was the final year that Wilson made the Giants uniforms, (Rawlings took over in 1987) and the last year that there was no maker's logo embroidered on the ends of the sleeves. I will note that the typical 1986 Giants tagging consisted of two sets of numbers— the player number and the two digit year. Jerseys with only the the two-digit year are often considered to be extra jerseys, supplied to the team to keep on hand for mid-season call-ups/player acquisitions and to replace jerseys for players when there is an issue with their current ones. While this is not an iron-clad rule, it is worth noting. Significantly, however, as a first-year roster player, Clark could well have been confirmed to the beginning of the season roster late; after the initial jersey order was processed with Wilson. We have no way of knowing with certainty, now. Experience shows that Wilson was provided with the list of player numbers and sizes somewhat early in Spring Training so that the team's uniforms could be made in time for opening day. Players that were not definitely chosen for the opening day roster at that time may not have been included on the initial stitching order.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows light to moderate use, with wrinkling of the tags, some use stains especially on the linen placket lining, and marks on top the the left sleeve that often comes from resting a bat with pine tar on that spot. A light table evaluation shows that all lettering and stitching is original and uncontrived. It is my conclusion that this jersey was used on-field.

Restoration Performed: Will Clark's rookie season was 1986; his first game appearance was April 8, 1986 so we can assume he started the season on the Giants MLB roster, and was the only player in 1986 to have worn #22. From a survey of other reasonably reliably authenticated Clark jerseys in our library, Clark wore exclusively size 44 jerseys, and at 6' 1" and 190 lbs it is a reasonable size for his use. The ghost of the missing nameplate is the correct length and shape for the player's name. Before the start of the 1987 season, following tradition, the team's Wilson jerseys were summarily stripped of nameplates to be sent to the minor leagues, since for 1987 the team was wearing Rawlings jerseys on-field with that company's embroidered logo on the sleeve end.

In my opinion, this jersey shows use, showed evidence of a MLB nameplate, so it was issued to a player in 1986, and Clark was the only player to have worn #22 in 1986. It is not unreasonable that Clark, as a rookie and called up to be on his first MLB roster in 1986 could have had a jersey issued to him that did not have the four-digit team tagging. The removal of the nameplate was common practice for potential reissue of equipment in the minor leagues in the following year, where their jersey may or may not have seen further use, without nameplates.

At the request of the jersey's owner, I recreated the nameplate from color matching warp-knit fabric, re-creating Clark's name in black over Frisco Orange in the same pattern used by the team in 1986. The edge is single needle serged, and the shape of the nameplate exactly matches the ghost of the old stitching as seen on the light table.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good, game used condition: the front is all original as are the back numbers, and a player nameplate matching the original and exactly covering the ghost of the one that had been removed has been recreated and applied. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Will Clark of the 1986 San Francisco Giants.

San Francisco Giants 1981 Road Jersey- Whitson

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of an alteration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: San Francisco Giants black road jersey with 1981 year tagging, lettered for O'Malley 35 with the team 1982 patch on the sleeve. Research and light table evidence shows that this jersey had originally been issued to pitcher Ed Whitson in 1981. Both of the front numbers had changed, the nameplate replaced and the back number "5" was unoriginal. The front team script and the "3" on back are original.

Work Performed: To return the jersey to its 1981 appearance: Removed the front numbers, sleeve patch, nameplate and the back numbers. Because the back #3 was so worn and stained, we elected to make an exact duplicate rather than attempt to make all new work match the worn out 3. Cut and stitched new elements, sewed with bleached orange thread to match the original front wordmark, aggressively cleaned the fabric and covered a hole in the back that had been caused by the rough removal of the original number 2. Cut and sewed replacement name on back in Giants vertical arch style on a properly serged-edge black knit nameplate Media blasted and dyed the new lettering to more closely match the patina of the old, stitched in place exactly over the original ghosts as seen on the light table. Stitched on new numbers on front and back with color matching ivory thread. All removed elements were returned to the collector.

Kenny Lofton 2001-2002 San Francisco Giants Black Alternate Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: November 26, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1126J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Black San Francisco Giants road alternate jersey, Russell six-button-front, full weight knit size 46 (marked and measured) Giants jersey customized for #1 Kenny Lofton from either the 2001 or 2002 seasons. These jerseys were not player or year tagged for the Giants, but this style was worn in only these two seasons and only for Friday night road games. The size is appropriate for Lofton in these seasons based on a review of his preferred jersey sizes throughout his career. Three color lettering on both back and front, black over Frisco orange over Nugget Gold; SAN FRANCISCO arched on front. Collar and sleeve ends are trimmed with orange-black-orange knit ribbon trim. Left sleeve features San Francisco Giants disc patch. The name is properly sewn to a plate. The jersey was presented without provenance.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell "Authentic Collection" manufacturer tag, in the correct style for these years is stitched on the left outside front tail of the jersey. Size flag tag "46 100% Polyester" is centered and pinch-sewn beneath. The Russell "R" logo is direct embroidered in orange on the end of the left sleeve below the team disk patch. Russell did not team-tag the Giants jerseys in any way during this time, and the vintage of the jersey pre-dates the wide use of MLB authentication program that began with limited use in 2001. While it is not team tagged, it is a size 46— a size not sold at retail, and the presence of the 100% polyester tag and the lack of the manufacturer size tag in the back of the collar are two characteristics of jerseys made for team issue.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all elements are original and unaltered. The manufacturer tagging is wrinkled and curled from wash/wear. It shows signs of appropriate wear for the limited use it would have received during a season's use, given that these jerseys were seldom worn.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits appropriate use and shows no signs of alteration or contrivance. It is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine as issued to Kenny Lofton during either the 2001 or 2002 seasons.

Madison Bumgarner San Francisco Giants Auto'ed 2014 Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: February 7, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0207J05

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Cream colored size 50 Majestic Cool Base San Francisco Giants jersey, #40 pitcher Madison Bumgarner. Three colored "GIANTS" in the team's traditional logo font, black/orange with a Nugget Gold drop-shadow. Orange/black/orange 3/8" knit trim rings the neck and the sleeve ends. The Giants team patch is stitched to the left sleeve. No name on back as is correct. MLB Silhouetted Batter logo patch in black/white/orange is stitched to the back of the neck. Bumgarner's #40 is stitched on back in the proper size and the same colors as the front lettering. It is autographed on the numeral 4 in silver Sharpie followed by the inscription "GU 14". (I have no professional opinion on the autograph) From this, I am dating the jersey to the 2014 season, though this same style/fabric jersey was worn by the player in years 2009-2015, all with the Giants. The jersey does not have any post-season patch on its sleeve, nor a mark that one was ever present there.

During the regular season, Bumgarner was 13-9 in 31 starts. Second-place finishers in their division and a postseason "Wild Card" entry, The Giants defeated the St. Louis Cardinals in the National League Championship Series in five games and beat the Kansas City Royals in seven games in the 2014 World Series, winning their third World Series in five years. Bumgarner was named the 2014 World Series MVP, finishing the series with a 2–0 record and an 0.43 ERA. In three pitching appearances, Bumgarner gave up only one run in 21 World Series innings.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Majestic "M" logo direct embroidered in black to the left sleeve end. Majestic heat-applied locker tag designates this as an "Authentic Collection" jersey in size 50. Pinched into the inside side seam is a manufacturer style tag that designates this as a style number 0680, the code reserved for jerseys made to team specifications and designated for team issue. Also pinched in the seam is a tailoring tag noting 1" + sleeve length. Another white tag is blank. Pinched in the lower right side outside seam is a gray flag tab noting Cool Base construction. The Giants did not team or player-tag their jerseys in 2014, in fact they did not tag most anything starting in 2000. Even though most game-worn jerseys were being MLB Authentication Program hologrammed and barcoded, this one is not. However, our research shows that the program's use was not universal in 2014.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitching is original and unaltered. The tagging shows moderate curling and fading, consistent with multiple washings. The jersey is in excellent condition without damage or repairs and was surely autographed after it was washed for the final time.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent, used condition, is properly lettered, bears team-spec style tagging and a player tailoring tag, is autographed noting the year of use, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was team issued and worn during the regular season by Madison Bumgarner of the 2014 San Francisco Giants.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Omar Vizquel 2005 or 2006 San Francisco Giants Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: March 15, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0315J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Road gray, Russell six-button-front, full weight knit size 42 San Francisco Giants jersey issued to and worn by Omar Vizquel during the 2005 or 2006 seasons. We have narrowed its issue to these two seasons of Vizquel's tenure with the Giants as these were the only two years where a right sleeve commemorative patch was not used, and this jersey has a plain left sleeve. The size is appropriate for Vizquel in 2005-2006 based on a review of his changing jersey sizes throughout his career. The numeral "1" is autographed boldly in silver marker by the player on the numeral "1" on back. I have no opinion on the authenticity of the autograph.

All lettering and numbering is three-layered black tackle twill with orange outline and a gold drop-shadow. "SAN FRANCISCO" in block lettering is arched across the chest. Collar and sleeve ends are trimmed with orange-black-orange knit ribbon trim. Left sleeve features San Francisco Giants disc patch. On back, number "13" directly under the player name, "VIZQUEL" in unique Giants' font, radially arched on a nameplate.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Majestic "Authentic Collection" manufacturer tag, in the correct style for these years is stitched on the left outside front tail of the jersey. Size flag tag "42" is centered and pinch-sewn beneath. A well-worn and now washed-blank cloth flag tag that most likely once told the jersey's date of issue is pinch sewn to its left. On the inside side seam of the jersey is the Majestic manufacturer's style tag that is also very faded from washing, but that clearly shows style number 0062, the designation for a team-issued specification jersey.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all elements are original and unaltered. Jersey shows signs of wear consistent with a full season's use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits significant use and wash wear. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Omar Vizquel during either the 2005 or 2006 seasons.

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of an alteration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: San Francisco Giants black road jersey with 1981 year tagging, lettered for O'Malley 35 with the team 1982 patch on the sleeve. Research and light table evidence shows that this jersey had originally been issued to pitcher Ed Whitson in 1981. Both of the front numbers had changed, the nameplate replaced and the back number "5" was unoriginal. The front team script and the "3" on back are original.

Work Performed: To return the jersey to its 1981 appearance: Removed the front numbers, sleeve patch, nameplate and the back numbers. Because the back #3 was so worn and stained, we elected to make an exact duplicate rather than attempt to make all new work match the worn out 3. Cut and stitched new elements, sewed with bleached orange thread to match the original front wordmark, aggressively cleaned the fabric and covered a hole in the back that had been caused by the rough removal of the original number 2. Cut and sewed replacement name on back in Giants vertical arch style on a properly serged-edge black knit nameplate Media blasted and dyed the new lettering to more closely match the patina of the old, stitched in place exactly over the original ghosts as seen on the light table. Stitched on new numbers on front and back with color matching ivory thread. All removed elements were returned to the collector.

Guardians/Indians Uniform History Notes

- The Indians had worn distinctive vests featuring the smiling Chief Wahoo on their chests from 1963 through 1969. In 1970, the team changed to a pinstripe home and a solid-gray road jersey, both with sleeves, the team name spelled out in Block letters embellished by a fancy three-color 3D drop shadow effect.
- But this style lasted only one year, as in 1971 the Indians dropped the fancy drop shadows, and their uniforms became very, very plain, featuring wordmark spelled out in simple vertically arched blue lettering. Some (many?) 1970 uniforms were converted for use in 1971, with lettering stripped from back and front to reuse them for the new year. It is hard to imagine any team going to such effort today, but in these earlier times nothing was wasted!
- After an uninspired uniform set for 1972, the first year of pullover knits, the Indians introduced a jersey set for 1973 with angular lettering that was meant to look rustic, but to some looked rough. It has earned the nickname "Caveman" style in some circles. First used in home white and road gray. Incredibly, this would represent the team's fifth distinctly different uniform set in five years.
- In 1974 a colorful red pullover jersey was introduced as an alternate and in 1975 a dark blue pullover became the alternate, with the red becoming the primary road jersey and the road gray was dropped.
- While the 1972 A's and 1977 Pirates are often credited with starting the "mix-and-match" look, where different colored pants were matched indiscriminately with the different colored uniform tops, the Indians were also engaging in this practice with their red, white, and gray sets as early as 1974 (with blue tops introduced in 1975).
- "Caveman" style lasts through 1977, and in 1978 the front lettering was replaced again with a more formal-looking vertically arched wordmark that said "Indians" on both home white and alternate navy blue tops, and "Cleveland" on the road grays.
- The road grays disappear after 1982, and the blue are used full time on the road 1983–1985.
- Button-front jerseys return in 1986 in classic home white and road gray styles that last through 1988. 1986 road jerseys have oddly-large vertically arched player NOBs—the only time the team would ever use vertical arching.
- From 1989–1993, the team becomes late adopters of the popular 1980s "racing stripes" trend, applying the style to both their existing home and road sets.
- "Indians" and "Cleveland" scripts returned in a total uniform makeover for 1994, coinciding with the opening of the new Jacobs Field. Various uniform trim and color tweaks were made every couple of years.
- An alternate home vest was added in 2002, with the chest adorned with the Chief Wahoo logo—a nod to their 1960s duds. These last through 2007.
- Block-lettered "nostalgia" style jerseys are introduced in 2008 (alternate home) and 2011 (road). All jerseys receive some minor alterations to wordmarks, trim, and outlines for 2012.
- Perhaps sensitive to fans' complaints that every year the Indians seem to be making the prior years' jerseys obsolete, the Indians took the unusual step of promising "no changes for at least the next three years" when they announced the 2012 updates.
- For 2014, the Indians quietly relieve Chief Wahoo of his duty as the team's primary logo, replacing him with a simple Block-letter "C" as worn on new-for-2014 batting practice jerseys and caps.
- The 2019 season brings notable changes to the Indians, where Chief Wahoo is deleted from the jersey sleeves and caps, the first time he has not appeared since 1972. The team had been hinting at the change for years on holiday uniforms, where the logo was replaced by the "Block C" instead.
- 2019 also introduced an alternate home red and a revised alternate blue jersey, now used only on the road, and the elimination of nameplates.
- 2022 brings a complete team rebranding from "Indians" to "Guardians", the new team name inspired by the large stone edifices (called "Guardians of Traffic") that flank the Hope Memorial Bridge to downtown Cleveland. Team colors remain unchanged. Home white, road gray, and alternate red and blue jerseys remain, but wordmarks now read "GUARDIANS" in a custom art-deco influenced arched script for home and alt red jerseys. For road gray and alt blue jerseys, "CLEVELAND" spelled out in a similar custom design print font. Special art-deco inspired custom fonts used for numbers.
- The Guardians unveiled their first City Connect jersey in 2024, drawing inspiration from the Hope Memorial Bridge and the sculptural pylons that symbolize strength and resilience. The navy jersey features stylized "CLE" lettering and back numbers designed to look etched in stone, the jersey's textured pattern is influenced by the Berea sandstone from which the pillars were carved while red and cream striping along the sleeves and sides is a direct nod to the club's 1989–1993 racing stripes.

* Indians started the season with the "14" Memorial disc on their sleeves. Larry Doby died on June 18th, so the "18 Doby" patch was added mid-season. On vest, it is worn on right chest.

 The Cleveland Bicentennial Patch was worn on the 1996 BP Jersey, and may have been worn for a while mid-season on the team's home white jersey. Still looking for news photo confirmation on this.

 The Indians wore the All-Star Game patch on all jerseys in 1997, instead of the Jackie Robinson Patch worn by the rest of baseball. After the All Star Game, they switched to the Jackie patch on the home white jersey only.

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

1970 Home

1970 flannel home jersey is made by Wilson, and is an attractive, clean design. It is only used for one season, but many (perhaps most?) were converted to 1971 jerseys by having their lettering stripped then replaced, evident from finding 1971-lettered jerseys with 1970 year tagging on the tail (example below). Cream-colored flannel with navy chalk pinstripe. All lettering is twill; navy/white with red 3D drop shadow. Numbers are a custom "light" stroke version of Wilson Varsity. Chief Wahoo patch sewn on the left sleeve.

Here, a 1970-tagged jersey stripped and re-lettered for 1971 use.

Attractive but simple one year design, flannel jersey, “Cleveland” vertically arched across front in equal-height letters, red/white twill with a navy 3D drop shadow. Back numbers are Varsity variant, with same three-color treatment. Surviving, unmolested original examples are rare. Many/most had the lettering stripped off and were converted into 1971 road jerseys. The example at top left is all original. The others are noted as “all lettering restored.” See the example of one of these that I restored after having been converted to a 1971 road jersey, a few pages ahead.

Many 1971 uniforms were actually year tagged "1970" and had been stripped and re lettered with 1971 graphics.

1971 Road

1971 road gray flannel jerseys were even plainer than the 1971 home jerseys, if that's possible. This is a one-year design made for the team by Spalding and based on the fact that few were made and they were likely "used-up" in Spring Training and in the minor leagues in subsequent years, it is very hard to find one today.

"Cleveland" on front in vertical arched Block lettering, but tapered with the word slightly taller at the ends and shorter in the middle. All lettering navy blue twill, back numbers are Spalding's variant style of Varsity, Chief Wahoo patch on left sleeve.

"Turn Back the Clock"— Literally: 1971 Jersey Returned to Original 1970 Configuration

Here is an excellent example of Indians' unfathomable frugality: As received from a collector, this 1971-style lettered jersey displayed 1970 year tagging on the tail, telling us that it had started life as a 1970 road jersey, and was then painstakingly stripped by the team, front and back, to convert it into a 1971 model. He elected to convert it back to its original livery. Above, the photographically enhanced light table photos show what had been there prior, which we verified against the original patterns we have on file, and after painstakingly stripping the jersey and cleaning it, cut and sewed the 1970 style lettering after properly aging it to make it look old and worn.

First-year pullover knit jersey, one-color red “Indians” arched across chest in simple, slightly vertical arch Block type. Wide red, white and blue sleeve ends and the same color trim on the V-neck. The 1972 double knit assumes the general look of the 1971 button-front flannel, which used blue lettering. Identical in design to the road jersey save for the color of the fabric.

Wilson made the home jerseys; one-color skinny-block red names on back, no nameplate, one-color red numbers in Wilson’s Varsity font. There is no team tagging at all on these jerseys, just the Wilson size tag in the neck.

There are very few if any original examples of these in the hobby. The reason is illustrated on the next page, where I will highlight my restoration of this very jersey. One of two things happened to these jerseys: they were stripped to become 1973 Indians jerseys, or they were sent to the minors and stripped to be reused there. The Indians were a frugal organization that wasted nothing. I have restored jerseys sent my way that have easily been reissued four or more times with front script and number changes.

Left: I acquired this jersey, blank and unused, from what was claimed to have been an estate sale of an Indians player or coach. It is the only original and unrestored example of one of these I have ever seen.

"So, what happened to all the 1972 Indians jerseys?

Below: Evidence now tells us that this jersey is, in fact, the same jersey shown on the prior page (now restored by me), and is likely the same one Perry is wearing on his Topps baseball card showing the ripped collar.

Whenever something disappears without a trace, there is a feeling of disbelief that such a heist could occur without any evidence of a plausible explanation. Such has always been the case of the 1972 Indians jerseys for me. I search constantly for these, mostly out of a sense of curiosity of their total disappearance from the hobby. Even had they been sent to the minor leagues, by now I would have found at least a couple for sale, regardless of their condition. But stumbling across this Heritage Auctions listing, a light snapped on for me. Is it possible that there are no 1972 Indians jerseys because the team turned them into 1973 Indians jerseys? It would not be far-fetched at all. Looking at the team's history, we have much evidence that their 1970 flannels were re-purposed into 1971, having had all lettering stripped, front and back. It simply never occurred to me that this may have been the fate of much of the entire population of 1972 knit jerseys.

This theory would certainly explain why neither home nor road 1972 one-year jerseys ever turn up.

Heritage Auctions listing:

1972 Gaylord Perry Cy Young Award Season Game Worn Cleveland Indians Jersey. Uniform experts will immediately balk at this lot title, noting that this unique font first appeared on the Tribe's uniforms in 1973, but close inspection reveals the stitching outline of the more pedestrian "Indians" font beneath, a one-season style that assures Cy Young season vintage. We must also report that the "Perry 36" on verso is likewise gone but still visible in a stitching "ghost," a number "17" having taken its place. Both of these alterations are team issued. Despite these changes, the garment must still be considered a collecting treasure, deriving from a season that saw Perry top all American Leaguers with twenty-four victories and twenty-nine complete games to claim Major League pitching's highest individual honor. Solid use is evident, though certainly a degree of this relates to secondary wear. Collar is custom cut at the bottom, a perfect match to Perry's 1973 Topps card #346. "Wilson [size] 46" label at interior collar is partially loose. Our consignor did confirm with Perry that he did such a customization. Blue sharpie signature on chest rates 9/10. LOA from Heritage Auctions. Pre-certified by PSA/DNA.

The restoration of this same jersey is detailed on the LOA link on the prior page. When I received it, it had already been inaccurately restored as a 1972 jersey; I stripped it and using the evidence of the original ghosts, did it over.

At left, the ghosts of three sets of numbers are there if you look closely enough: the original 36, the 1973 #17 and the incorrect restoration's #36. You can see the ghost of the 1973 Indians wordmark on the bottom photo.

The Indians one-year-only 1972 gray road jersey was the team's first year using knits. The design might be called several things: classic, restrained, uninspired, or boring. Home and road jersey bodies are identical except for the color of the fabric. Red twill "Indians" vertical arched on the front.

Note the difference from the home jersey, shown on the prior page, in the style of lettering on the back: Here, Rawlings used their own Block Bold lettering and numbers on the reverse (Rawlings' default font) which is different from the Wilson home jersey that uses Wilson's own stock "house" fonts for names and numbers.

In decades of collecting and authenticating, the Spahn 1972 road gray (above) is the only example of this jersey style I have come across that has not been stripped and re-lettered for use by either the 1973 Indians or a minor league club. It is my guess that Spahn, a soon-to-be Hall of Famer (1973 induction) simply took his jersey home at the end of the year instead of turning it in, sparing it from being ruined.

The Hennigan example (right) is more typical of the breed. It it had been passed down to minor league San Antonio and re-lettered front and back, then inaccurately restored, before it was sent to me for a proper restoration which you can read about in the linked LOA.

More 1972 Indians Jerseys Demoted to the Minor Leagues

See the detailed story of the complete restoration, on my Facebook blog, here.

Some restorations are simply not worthwhile, except for the love of the game and the challenge of the task at hand.

Left: The jersey was found by its owner offered on eBay as an Oklahoma City Eighty-Niners jersey. It was in sad shape - tattered, dirty and with letters missing and back number peeling. He wasn't sure what he was getting, but a deal was struck and it came home. Close inspection when he received it revealed that it originally bore the number 6 on back (though oddly NOT the same 6 that was on its back now) and the ghost of the name on back "HOFMAN". While no roster player wore #6, research from the 1972 Indians team media guide showed that former MLB player Bobby Hofman was indeed a coach on the 1972 squad. We found his photo in the 1972 Indians press kit, probably wearing this same shirt.

This is the most insane restoration I have ever attempted; it took aircraft paint remover to get the old glue out. As a crowning touch, look at the name on back, spaced and arched as only the Indians would ever do it, a team that I swear had a one-eyed drunk stitcher with no ruler.

Rawlings 1973-1974

For 1973, the Indians wordmark is different, but if you look closely, notice that the jersey body is the same as 1972. Rawlings was contracted to provide new 1973 issues, but ever the cheapskates, the Indians converted many used 1972 Wilson-made jerseys to the new 1973 look. Not until I had the opportunity to personally examine some of these Wilson jerseys did I realize that they were re-lettered 1972 jerseys; I thought that both Wilson and Rawlings had been contracted to provide sets of 1973 uniforms, which I now believe was not the case. Besides the new angular team name on front (some call it the "Caveman" style) a large cartoonish batting Chief Wahoo disk patch was added to the left sleeve. The number fonts used on the back in 1973 are usually Rawlings version of Full Block Bold, with tall and narrow player name on back lettering, but game photos show a mix of lettering fonts on the field, typical for the time, as reissues were mixed with new ones.

Right: The Cleveland "Spirit of '76 Sports" patch was worn by the Indians on their right sleeve all year. I recall that it was supposed to have been worn by the city's other professional sports teams that year, but as far as I can tell only the Indians wore it. Scanning through Getty images photos of the NBA Cavaliers and NFL Browns does not show them wearing it. The patch shown here is an original, not a replica.

While we have examples of both Wilson and Rawlings tagged jerseys in use in 1974, most jersey have no year tagging. Often the only way to be sure of the year of issue is by the player rosters. For example, Milt Wilcox was on the Indians in 1974 but not 1975, so this must be a 1974 issue.

Wilson takes over making all the Indians jerseys for the 1975 season. The jerseys are generally indistinguishable from the 1974 Rawlings jerseys, using the same player name and number font as Rawlings did in 1974. However, it typical Indians fashion, a hodge podge of fonts still appears on the field. Notice the 1976 Haddix jersey with a Block bold style #2 on back, while the 1975 Fitzmorris and 1974 Wilcox use the Indians brand of Varsity numbers.

1970s and early 1980s Indians jerseys have the sloppiest execution of back lettering layout of any MLB team. Name arches are seldom symmetric and are inconsistent from jersey to jersey, and back number placement is frequently crooked and off center. None of this is up to Wilson's standards, and makes me wonder if the Indians' jerseys were lettered locally rather than at the Wilson factory.

The Indians added the red jersey as an alternate that could be worn on the road or at home for 1974. By 1975, the road gray jersey was gone from the lineup, and a colored jersey was always worn on the road, with the red as the primary road jersey, but occasionally worn at home, too. Matching bright red pants were added as an option to be worn with this red jersey instead of the standard whites or grays. No numbers on front. Large batting Chief Wahoo disc patch on left sleeve. 1974-1977 Indians Mix-and-Match

When people talk about "mix-and-match" uniform sets, the reference is usually to the late 1970s Pittsburgh Pirates with their various combinations of white, yellow, black, and bumblebee pinstripes. But in reality, as early as 1974, the Indians were onto the trend with their combination of red, white, and blue tops and white, gray, and red pants.

More Indians Jerseys Demoted to the Minor Leagues

All: Andrew Jenks Collection

One of the reasons that it is so nearly impossible to find 1970s Indians game jerseys in the hobby is that so many of them were recycled to their minor league clubs, where they were totally stripped of their front lettering and player name and often re-numbered and reissued with the crests of the minor league club on them; after which most were summarily used to death. I've seen many of these and restored more than a few. Here are two examples from collector Andrew Jenks. Star-player jerseys were not spared. The "Tomahawks" one, top left is a rare 1973–1974 Indians road gray, of which practically none exist today.

Toby Harrah's 1978 home jersey was sent to Batavia (NY), where it was totally stripped for reuse. Bottom left shows my restoration next to the jersey as I received it. Today, it seems hard to believe that it was worth the time and trouble to do this, but there was seemingly little to no collector interest at the time and labor was inexpensive, so...

As restored

As an MLB historian and restoration specialist, I am struck by the number of Indians MLB jerseys from the pre-1990 period I have been tasked to restore that had ended up in the minors—not only stripped of player names and often re-numbered, but also relieved of their front crests. These are some photos of ones that were sent down.

Nameplates used. 1986 front numbers are 4 3/4" tall, they shrink to 4" for 1987–1988. Game used versions of this style are hard to find in the hobby as these were all sent to the minors and used to the point of destruction to be as scarce as they have become. Replica versions of this style are very popular, given that they are the style used in the popular movie "Major League" starring Charlie Sheen.

Andrew Jenks Collection

For 1986, the Indians went back to road gray button-front jerseys, leaving the blue pull-overs behind. While Rawlings supplied their home whites for 1986, Wilson made the team's road jerseys. Player numbers were Wilson Varsity on both front and back, single color red on fronts and bold Navy outlined with red on back. Player names were done in Wilson's hand-drawn vertical arch style in the same two colors, and names were sewn on plates. Rawlings would take over making both home and road jerseys for 1987, so the Wilson fonts on this style would be a one- year oddity.

Rawlings assumes the contract for both home and road uniforms for 1987, and the player lettering is standardized using the Rawlings template. Standard block numbers are used, one color on front and two-color on back. 1986's use of vertical arch lettering for road jersey player names is discontinued. Home and road for this style is identical except for color of fabric.

Surviving examples of this style are uncommon in the hobby. Most were "used up" in the minor leagues after their MLB service was through.

Start of 1992 Season - What Might Have Happened?

When restoring and authenticating jerseys, I sometimes come across oddities that make me go back to my prior research and dig deeper. This is one of those times. A collector sent me a 1992 Indians home jersey to restore. It was a Russell jersey that showed evidence of a very long nameplate having been on the back, for a player with a very short name. I went back and checked my photo archives and saw that this was not the only example of a jersey with an oddly long nameplate. While Russell was the supplier of record for 1992 from multiple dated press photos, it appears the Indians started the 1992 season both at home and on the road in April wearing Rawlings jerseys. The examples of these Russell 1992-tagged jerseys we have encountered with very long, untrimmed nameplates, perhaps indicates a rush job. It would be pure speculation, but this combination of facts might lead me to conclude that there was some problem with Russell's on-time delivery of the team's new 1992 home jerseys that could have required the team to continue to use 1991 jerseys (which would have been used in 1992 Spring Training anyway) The situation seems to have corrected by the second month of the season; press photos dated from May and later show the team wearing Russell jerseys.

For 2002, just minor revisions were made to the Indians' uniforms. On the home jersey, trim color is changed from plain red to navy blue on the collar and front, and to navy/gray/navy knit trim on the sleeve ends. Logo and lettering change to three-color red/metallic silver/navy blue. No numbers on front, on back, nameplates are used. Back numbers are still Block font. Blue- and Metallic Silver-trimmed Oddballs

Apparently the Indians initially went a little overboard with the silver trim for 2002, as they actually approved jerseys with metallic silver in the trim, both around the sleeves and on the front placket. This decision got far enough that Russell made a first run of these jerseys before the Indians changed their minds and axed the metallic silver from the braid. The Indians went so far as to issue a statement to apparel manufacturers telling them that the plans had changed, and these jerseys were not to be used. I recall briefly seeing some of these oddballs for sale with cut tags on eBay, but did not pay enough attention to them at the time, and I have been unsuccessfully looking for a renegade example ever since.

Home alternate vest added for 2002. Worn with a plain navy undershirt with no patches on its sleeves. Chest logo and lettering change to three-color red/metallic silver/navy blue. Navy knit trim rings the placket. No numbers on front in 2002, numbers on the right chest added 2003–2007. Note the proper low number placement.

On back, nameplates are used. Back numbers are still Block font, names are red/silver/navy 3D drop shadow. Wahoo patch on left chest also has metallic silver added in highlights and around the edge. Navy blue border added to patch.

For 2002, the alternate jersey is changed slightly. White sleeve end and front knit trim color is changed to gray. Logo and lettering change to three-color: red/navy/metallic silver. Older “Cleveland” navy blue jersey discontinued after 2001; this is the only navy jersey left in the lineup for 2002. No numbers on front, on back, nameplates used. Back numbers are still Block font, names are red/navy/metallic silver 3D drop shadow. Wahoo patch on sleeve has navy blue border added to patch (the older patch was edged in white).

The metallic silver outlining that had adorned the home jersey lettering since 2002 is discarded and replaced with white. Sleeve end trim reverts to a simple navy knit trim strip, replacing the navy/gray/navy braid that had been used before. The Chief Wahoo patch on the sleeve has its outline color changed from blue to white, and the border is narrower.

Player name on back loses the navy blue drop shadow that it gained in 2002 in favor of a standard blue layer. Nameplates are used.

Very subtle changes to outlining. The lettering on the front team script, and the player name and number on the back changes to red/navy/white from red/navy/gray used before. The Navy lettering outline layer is now very narrow, half the width of the white layer that borders it. The border on the Chief Wahoo sleeve patch changes from silver to white. The jersey body itself stays the same as from the prior year.

Notice that the third color outline on the player NOB intentionally fills in the spaces in the open letters (like A,B,P and R). Nameplates are used.

2008-2016 Alternate Home

There are two variations of this jersey: the first iteration was worn 2008–2011 and the second 2012–2016.

This very plain looking, traditionally styled uniform jersey is not a reproduction of any past-year design. Instead, it is a new design created to represent the combined simplicity of several Indians uniforms from decades past. The cream-colored button-front jersey is devoid of sleeve end trim or other adornment. Chief Wahoo patch is sewn on the left sleeve. Front and back lettering is red outlined with navy, no player names are used on back.

For 2012, the front team name lettering size is adjusted to make it just slightly smaller, and the arch in the word is made slightly more pronounced. Critics had complained that on smaller players the lettering looked like it "went from chin to belt." The new size is less than ½" smaller than the old. 2008–2011 height of the lettering is 4 5/16", 2012 and after it is 3 7/8"

This style is discontinued after 2016.

The Indians introduced a new, Block-lettered road jersey for 2011 that they claim was inspired by their 1901 jersey (from 110 years prior). That's a bit of a stretch, as a depiction of the 1901 road jersey is shown here (right).

Reaction seems to have been overall positive, as the design is classic, if uninspired. Some think that the word "Cleveland" formerly rendered in multi-colored script was too hard to read and looked clumsy anyway. All lettering is navy on red, nameplates are used. Names use a condensed font, even when they are short names. Extra Condensed used liberally for longer names. Chief Wahoo remains the consistent family anchor on the left sleeve.

2012 Team Wordmark Adjustment

1994-2011 Jersey Script

Starting 1994 "Print" Script

Revised 2012 Jersey Script

Among the minor changes to the 2012 uniform lineup was a standardization of the team's front script wordmark. Fans have noticed that the Indians have used a different version of the script in print material than on their uniforms since the current design debuted in 1994. The revised script is used on both the home white and alternate blue jersey starting with the 2012 season, and wordmark outlining has been simplified to a single one instead of the previous double outline. The new script is cleaner in design than the old uniform script. Perhaps sensitive to fans complaints about constantly changing merchandise, the Indians announced that there would be no more fiddling with game uniforms for the next three seasons, at least. The Tribe had been regularly changing things on its uniforms, though the one thing that many critics wanted to see changed, stayed...for the moment—the smiling, bright-red-skinned Chief Wahoo on the sleeve.

Minor tweaks are made to the Indians home uniform for 2012. The white home uniform has its trim changed, adding thin navy knit trim at the very edge of the collar. The same thin navy knit trim is used near the sleeve ends. The knit trim that had adorned the placket in years prior has been removed, leaving the uniform front plain white.

The Indians front script loses its double outlining, and is now red with a simple navy outline. But closer inspection shows the logo itself has been changed, making it more like the team script that has long been represented as the official club logo in print. Oddly it had not matched with the script used on the team's uniforms until now.

Back is equally simple in design: Block name and numbers in the same red/navy color combination as the script on front. Nameplates used.

This is a very nice, clean design tuning that ditches all of the unnecessary ornamentation. In a somewhat unusual move, the Indians volunteered that they would not make any more uniform changes for at least three years, perhaps admitting to souvenir-buying fans that they have been tinkering a bit too much.

Minor adjustments are made to the Indians blue alternate uniform for 2012. It has its trim changed, adding thin gray knit trim at the very edge of the collar. Equally thin gray knit trim is used near the sleeve ends.

Just like the changes to the home jersey, the Indians front script loses its double outlining, and is now red with a simple white outline. But closer inspection shows the jersey wordmark itself has been altered, making it more like the team script that has long been represented as the official club logo in print. Chief Wahoo remains at his usual position on the left sleeve.

The jersey back is equally simple in design: Block name and numbers in the same red/white color combination as the script on front Nameplates used.

2015-2018 Alternate Blue (New Darker Shade)

While the navy jersey fabric is darker for 2015, the navy twill lettering and the navy trim on the white, cream and gray jerseys stays the same as before.

In 2012, the Indians promised fans that it would not make any more changes to the team's uniforms for at least the next three years. This, in response to the complaint that the Indians were changing some detail or another every year, annoying die-hard fans who wanted to wear current team attire. If we ignore the new BP jersey introduced for 2012 (along with every other team in the league), they kept their promise. But in late 2015, I knew something was "up" as loads of Indians navy blue alternate jerseys were dumped to the discounters.

The team changed the color of navy blue it uses for 2015, making it darker, and making it better match the team's hats. While it may have seemed like a small thing, on Sports Illustrated's online Indians fan page, Brian Heise wrote, "The change also makes for a much cleaner and crisper look. the deep cobalt never seemed to allow for enough contrast from the bright shade of red used with the home caps. The end result almost allowed for a purplish hue to enter into the picture if the light hit just right. Simply put, it didn't provide enough contrast and never really looked right. The dark navy provides that missing contrast by allowing the brightness of the red to pop and eliminating the strange purplish look. When paired with the helmets, which have always been a darker shade of navy, the differences became even more glaring."

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10-20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of old.

The 2019 version of the Indians' uniform updates bring one incredibly controversial change and one that very few likely even noticed. For the first time since 1972, the Indians jersey did not feature some version of their Chief Wahoo logo on the sleeve, which critics considered insensitive at best, and at worst, racist. Fan response was mixed, and at least for 2019, the space was filled with the All-Star Patch, recognizing Cleveland's status as host city. The right sleeve bears the MLB150 patch like all other teams that year. Lost in the controversy of Wahoo's departure was the removal of the team's nameplates on back, as the Indians were one of the last two nameplate holdouts along with the Rays. In that respect, two eras ended with one jersey—one with a bang, and one a whimper. Other than those changes, the rest of the jersey remains the same as it was since its 2012 update.

The hubbub around the Indians' banishment of Chief Wahoo did not stop with its home jerseys; it extends here to the road grays as well. However, one imagines home fans of other teams were less sensitive to the change than those in Cleveland, who were accustomed to seeing Wahoo on the home uniforms dozens of times each year. Wahoo's space on the left sleeve is filled with the All-Star Patch, recognizing Cleveland's status as host city. The right sleeve bears the MLB150 patch like all other teams that year. Like the home jerseys, these lose the nameplates as well. Other than those changes, the rest of the jersey remains the same as it has since its 2011 introduction.

The 2019 updates that saw the departure of Chief Wahoo from the Indians' existing uniforms also bring the introduction of a new red alternate jersey into the rotation. These Majestic Flex Base jerseys recall the Indians' 1970's "mix-and-match" era of distinctive uniforms in spirit if not in style. Like the team's white and gray jerseys, blue knit trim encircles the neck opening and resides above the sleeve ends. A blue/white version of the Indians script adorns the front, while matching blue/white names and numbers in block appear on back. For 2019, the left sleeve sports an All-Star Patch, recognizing Cleveland's status as host city, while the right bears the MLB150 patch like all other teams that year. This new jersey starts fresh with no sign of Chief Wahoo, or nameplates, which were ditched after the 2018 season.

Blue alternate jerseys have long been a part of the Indians' rotation, and the 2019 update takes a simpler approach than previous navy designs. Entirely devoid of trim, this Majestic Flex Base jersey features red/white lettering throughout, including the block "Cleveland" wordmark (taken from the gray road jerseys), and block player names and numbers on back. For 2019, the left sleeve sports an All-Star Patch, recognizing Cleveland's status as host city, while the right bears the MLB150 patch like all other teams that year. 2022: From Indians to Guardians

Cleveland changing name from Indians to Guardians after 2021 season

Excerpted from espn.com, July 23, 2021

Known as the Indians since 1915, Cleveland's Major League Baseball team will next be called the Guardians.

The ballclub announced the name change Friday...ending months of internal discussions triggered by a national reckoning by institutions and teams to permanently drop logos and names considered racist. The name change is effective at the end of the 2021 season.

Cleveland's new name was inspired by the large landmark stone edifices—referred to as traffic guardians—that flank both ends of the Hope Memorial Bridge, which connects downtown to Ohio City.

The team's colors will remain the same, and the new Guardians logos will incorporate some of the architectural features of the bridge.

One of the Guardians of Traffic statues on Cleveland's Hope Memorial Bridge, the inspiration for the team's name and iconography.

Guardians

CLEVELAND 216

Here's how the team describes their new look:

CONTINUITY

COLORS REMAIN: Our team colors will remain the same scheme that has been part of our organization for more than 80 years to honor our rich baseball heritage as well as the tradition of baseball as America's pastime

SCRIPT WORDMARK RETURNS: The new Guardians wordmark will have a familiar script style of the last 75 years while evoking the structural architecture of the Hope Memorial Bridge, mimicking the trusses of the bridge's underside

HOME/ROAD UNIFORMS: The Club will continue to wear CLEVELAND on the road uniforms, featuring our Bridge Print alphabet derived from the Diamond C, and the Guardians script wordmark on the home uniforms

EVOLUTION

'C' EVOLUTION: Our new "Diamond C" will be an evolution of the Block C and respects the tradition and heritage of Cleveland Baseball. The new C stands tall —just as the Guardians of Traffic stand watch over our ballpark and city—and draws from the ascending diamond motifs at the top of each Guardian pylon. The weight of the C is bold and its tapered shape is inspired by letterforms from the 1920 and 1948 World Series clubs

NEW LOGOMARK: The Guardian's Fastball embodies what it means to be a Cleveland Guardian in its strong, yet simple design. It is inspired by the helmets and wings of the Hope Memorial Bridge's Guardian statues and the G purposefully wraps around and guards the baseball. The split-finger design is a tribute to our strong pitching heritage

Nike Flex Base 2020-2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Jonathan C. Baum Collection

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Guardians home jersey, which was introduced just two years prior. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, but the team's front lettering splits about the same as before. Neck and sleeve-end trim are now sewn-in to their respective seams rather than sewn on top of the jersey itself. As such, both appear wider than in previous seasons. The Guardians use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024. Despite an update to the style code on the home jersey tags in 2022–2023 where ":GU" for "Guardians" was used, Nike inexplicably reverts to using "IA" in 2024, which stands for "Indians," the team's former name.

2024-2025 City Connect

When changing from the Indians to the Guardians for the 2022 season, the team took inspiration for its new identity from the Hope Memorial Bridge, a symbol of Cleveland that is located by the ballpark. They stuck close to this script, with a little nod to team history, when designing their inaugural City Connect uniform, unveiled in May 2024. From the team's press release:

The Cleveland Guardians City Connect uniform is inspired by the Guardians of Traffic pillars on the Hope Memorial Bridge just outside of Progressive Field. The blue jersey's textured pattern is influenced by the Berea sandstone from which the pillars were carved over 90 years ago, a reflection of the resilience of the statues and the city they inspire.

The sculptural art deco 'CLE' wordmark and number set are layered to look like they've been etched in stone, similar to the pylons that support each statue.

The uniform's red and blue color scheme is rooted in Cleveland baseball tradition, staying true to the club's history. The braiding down the sides of the jersey and pants features an intricate design found on the statues and gives a nod to the strength and excitement of the early '90s teams.

Personalized touches can be found on the jocktag, which displays 'The Land,' and inside the neck, with an 'EST 1901' graphic, the year in which the organization was founded.

Since this jersey debuted in 2024, it has only existed on the Nike Vapor Premiere Elite template. Note that the stripe pattern on the sleeves and down the sides of the jersey are sewn on top of the jersey fabric and are not set into the jersey as they were in the team's 1988–1993 jerseys. Despite the intricate pattern on the back numbers, they are perforated. The similarly styled (and not much smaller) front "CLE" letters are not. Carryover City Connect jerseys are not updated in 2025, despite the updates to the team's other jerseys for the 2025 season.

The Guardians make slight modifications to their home jersey in 2025, replacing their blue/white neck and sleeve-end set-in trim with red/blue/red. It is a small change that makes a big difference to prioritize the red as a dominant color. Otherwise, the jersey remains the same, except for the 2025 league-wide minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

It is a small change that makes a big difference to brighten the jersey a little with the presence of more red throughout. Otherwise, the 2025 season brings many other changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. In addition, the jersey also includes the 2025 league-wide minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams’ non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

Mid 1980s-1993 Batting Practice

1993 with "Olin/Crews" patch

1984-1997 Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

The Indians players often wore these pullover zipper-neck BP jerseys from the mid-80s until the mid-90s. I do not have specific dates of use, but 1984–1997 are the years that players appear in these jerseys in dated news photos.

These Majestic jerseys feature multi-striped red/white/navy sleeve and neck trim, and the Chief Wahoo sewn to the left chest. Two-color red/white Majestic Varsity numbers on the back.

1994-1998 Batting Practice

1995

In 1994, the BP jersey loses its striped sleeve end and V-neck trim, and gains two buttons at the collar. Chief Wahoo logo patch remains on the left chest.

No names used on back, but Russell's two-color numbers are a huge 10" red/white for 1994–1998. In 1997–1998, Majestic numbers shrink to a more normal 8 ½" tall (approximately). Indians generally use commemorative patches on their BP jerseys as well.

Mesh construction, pullover with two-button neck, Chief Wahoo patch sewn on the left chest just as before.

However, dual wide red stripes separated by a thin navy band now encircle the sleeves at the shoulders.

On Russell issued jerseys, extra tall red/white Block numbers are huge 10” red/white as they have been since 1994.

Russell Jerseys use extra-tall block numbers. Majestic jerseys 1999-2001 use normal sized Majestic Varsity numbers. Silhouetted Batter patch added to the back of the neck in 2000.

2002 Batting Practice

- Chief Wahoo disappears from the batting practice jersey in 1999, replaced by stylized letter “I," in the style of the first letter of the Indians’ wordmark logo.
- One-year-style mesh jersey construction, red knit sleeve bands now have a white stripe between them. Still no names on back. Numbers are smaller (9”) and are three-color red/navy/white.

2003-2006 Batting Practice

Jersey fabric changes from mesh to a new, softer non-mesh moisture-wicking type, but one that fades badly in use and is highly susceptible to fabric pulls. Red piping on sleeve tops, single red bands now run underneath the sleeves. Numbers are three-color, red/navy/white and standard-sized. No names on back.

2007-2010 Batting Practice

The 2007 batting practice jersey redesign for all teams was hardly noticeable in the Indians' camp.

Logo and numbers are heat-pressed appliqué and no longer made of sewn twill.

Except for the different placement of the red trim (it is now under the arms instead of looped over them), the jersey is nearly identical to its 2003 –2006 predecessors.

One-button neck, cursive "I" logo on left chest. Three-color numbers on the back in red, navy, white. 2007–2008, no player names on back. Player NOB added for 2009 and 2010.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011 Batting Practice

The batting practice jersey for 2011 features a tall Block front wordmark, with player numbers and name all in three-color twill.

It is a button-front design in deep blue with contrasting solid red side panels and a red panel above the player's name on back.

The "19" on the sleeve is for Bob Feller; it is different from the patch used on game uniforms because the team was late in gaining the rights to use the silhouetted image of Feller from the owner of the photograph it was copied from! (complete story in the Commemorative Patches section of this chapter).

The batting practice jersey is simplified for 2012. The red panel across the top of the back is eliminated and replaced with a blue one, and all lettering and wordmarks change to two-color from the three-color designs used in 2011. The lettering is twill.

For 2014, Majestic and MLB change all the BP jerseys in the Major Leagues, adding striped knit sleeve and neck trim and changing the tag on the tail of all of them to a new, tall rectangular design. While some teams make minor changes, the Indians take a deliberate step that lessens the appearance of the polarizing Chief Wahoo mascot figure in its wardrobe. These new BP jerseys feature the Indians' newly-designated primary team mark, a simple red, capital "C" that replaces Wahoo on the left chest. The new BP jersey is two-toned, with the entire back panel in red. Player names and numbers on back are in navy blue outlined with white.

While the 2015 batting practice jersey appears identical to the 2014 edition, its fabric is actually a shade darker, correcting a perceived mismatch between lettering, trim and cloth. Desiring a shade of navy that looked more like black and less blue, the Indians changed their caps, blue alternate game jersey and BP jersey to a new hue. See the 2015 alternate game jersey page in the first section of this chapter for a closer look at the Pantone charts comparing old colors with new. The photo immediately to the left shows the two colors side by side.

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

In 2016, for the first time, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Indians use their regular season blue alternate as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name (on a nameplate) and back numbers are red patterned twill/white. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "AZ" representing where the Indians spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training

The Indians again use their regular season blue alternate as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “AZ” representing where the Indians spend Spring Training.

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017-2019 Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Team logos and other lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Indians jersey is blue with red back and underarm gussets. The red Block “C” logo, which also appears on their caps, adorns the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in red/white Block on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design template of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts, but only one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The Indians use their regular-season blue alternate as their base. The name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "AZ" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns. The Indians use their regular-season blue alternate, as the base for this design, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "ARZ," referencing their Spring Training home. The name and back numbers are red/white. Noticeably absent from the jersey is the Chief Wahoo sleeve patch, which the team drops from all jerseys after the 2018 season.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2021 Spring Training

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, All Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates. For 2020–2021, the Indians use their regular-season blue alternate as a base, with red/white name and back numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

2022-2023 Spring Training

With the team's rebrand tin 2022, the Guardians also update their Spring Training look by adopting their new road alternate jersey for the preseason. The navy jersey by Nike features all lettering in red/white, with "Cleveland" on front and player numbers on back in what the team calls "Bridge Print" font, while player names on back appear in Block. The "Guardians Fastball" patch adorns the sleeve.

Special Events Jerseys

1992 Turn Back the Clock to 1932

The Indians had donated their actual 1932 uniforms to the 1933 Caledonia, Ohio minor league team, as seen in this photo from the Marion Ohio Historical Society

The 1992 Russell TBTC knit uniform recalled the 1929–1932 Indians. Game played on July 31 vs. the Detroit Tigers, who also dressed in their 1932 style. The Indians played their first game in Cleveland/Lakefront/Municipal Stadium on July 31, 1932, so this game was 60 years later to the day.

These uniforms were chosen to be worn for the Indians' very first Turn Back the Clock game, in their last season at Memorial Stadium. 1932 had been the Indians' first season playing there.

1995 Turn Back the Clock to 1975

June 8, 1995: Turn Back the Clock game between the Indians and Brewers that was played in Milwaukee. Both teams are listed as wearing 1975 uniforms made by Mitchell & Ness, though the Indians' jerseys incorrectly lack player names on the back. The uniforms were cut very "generously" meaning that the they were very baggy on most players, very unlike the skin tight styles of the 1970s. Game jerseys did not have the front shirt tail tag typical on retail Mitchell & Ness garments, nor any special "TBTC" tagging often included by Mitchell & Ness for throwback games.

1997 Negro Leagues Tribute (1946 Cleveland Buckeyes)

Portsmouth DAILY TIMES Monday, July 14, 1997 B5

Cleveland Buckeyes wallop Minnesota Gophers

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Cleveland starter Bartolo Colon is having an up and down season. On Sunday, the rookie may have proven he belongs up in the majors instead of down in the minors.

Colon, called up by the Indians for the fourth time this season, allowed three hits over five innings and Jim Thome had three RBIs with a homer and double as Cleveland beat the Minnesota Twins 12-5 on Sunday.

With a fastball clocked at 98 mph, the 23-year-old right-hander did not allow a hit until Denny Hocking's one-out single in the fifth inning. He struck out four and walked three.

"He had a presence about him, an air of confidence," Indians manager Mike Hargrove said. "It looked like he felt he belonged."

Colon (3-2), who pitched a no-hitter for Triple-A Buffalo on June 20, was bothered by arm problems earlier this season. He was called up earlier in the day to pitch against the Twins.

David Weathers replaced Colon in the sixth and allowed two seventh-inning runs before Russ Morman pitched the eighth and Eric Plunk the ninth.

"He threw hard, also had a good breaking ball and changeup," Twins starter Tom Kelly said of Colon. "He looks to be very talented."

Brian Giles added a two-run homer in a six-run sixth inning as the Indians won for the eighth time in 10 games.

Thome gave the Indians a 1-0 lead in the first inning with his 20th homer. His two-run double in the third off LaTroy Hawkins (2-5) gave Cleveland a 3-0 lead.

The Indians made it 5-0 in the fourth Pat Borders' RBI triple and Omar Vizquel's bloop single. Thome scored on Giles' fifth-inning single to make it 6-0.

The Twins, losers of five of their last six games, closed to 6-3 in the fifth on Chuck Knoblauch's RBI single and Rich Becker's two-run double.

In the sixth, the Indians sent 10 batters to the plate, with Giles' homer coming off Mike Trombley. Julio Franco, David Justice, and Matt Williams added RBI singles and Franco scored on the front end of a double-steal.

Minnesota added two runs in the seventh on an RBI single by Paul Molitor and Greg Myers' RBI fielder's choice.

Hawkins, who has lost five in a row since winning on June 17, allowed five runs on six hits in 4 2-3 innings before he was replaced by Greg Swindell. Swindell got the final out of the fifth but allowed two runs in sixth before he was replaced by Trombley.

Notes:

Prior to the game, Larry Doby was honored for breaking the American League color barrier in 1947. The Indians wore gray replica uniforms of the 1946 Negro League Cleveland Buckeyes. The Twins wore dressed in replicas of the dark blue uniforms worn by the independent Saint Paul Gophers Negro team that played from 1907-10.

IN THERE — The Cleveland Indians' Julio Franco steals home as Twins catcher Greg Myers waits for the throw. The steal of home was the front half of a double steal. The Indians went on to win 12-5. As part of the honors being accorded to Larry Doby, first black player in the American League, the players wore replicas of old-time uniforms worn originally by teams in the Negro League. The Indians wore the uniform of the Cleveland Buckeyes; the Twins were costumed as the Minnesota Gophers.

The Indians played the Minnesota Twins on July 13, 1997 in their first Negro League throwback game. The Indians appeared in the road uniforms of the 1946 Cleveland Buckeyes; the Twins as the 1909 St. Paul "Colored Gophers."

This game was played on September 10, 1999 in Chicago vs. the White Sox. Sublimated oversized Indians team script on front.

The back lettering is two-color twill, red outlined with metallic silver. We'd call this "Computer OCR" the same font used by the Marlins and Angels for these uniforms. Ironic/funny in that while it may have once been futuristic, used to write machine-readable numbers at the bottoms of checks, the technology that it represents is from the 1960s, just slightly more modern than paper punch cards. Multiple examples of purportedly game used Indians TATC jerseys with incorrect lettering fonts have been sold at auction over the years.

These jerseys were reportedly given to players after the game, and they almost never surface. Notice that game worn jersey above center has a red Russell "R" embroidered on the sleeve end; retail sale ones generally either have none, or a blue "R." (Circled in the photos above in yellow for emphasis).

2003 Turn Back the Clock to 1953

- July 13, 2003: Game held in tribute to Al Rosen, 1953 AL MVP. The opponent that day was the White Sox who dressed in 1953 road uniforms.
- These 2003 examples are made in knit by Russell and have the 2003 commemorative patches sewn on them. Even though they are made by the same manufacturer as the 1993 TBTC versions of the same year's jerseys, the front team wordmark not exactly the same to the prior. This one is slightly condensed and is not quite as faithful to the original as the earlier effort.
- Varsity numbers used in 2003, original 1953 jerseys used a much thinner-weight font for the back numbers (see 1993 Turn Back the Clock page for an example).

2004 Turn Back the Clock to 1954

Original 1952 flannel for comparison

On May 8, 2004, the Indians Turned Back the Clock 50 years and appeared in Majestic double knit reproductions of their 1954 road uniforms vs. the 1954 Baltimore Orioles. These are rather unconvincing copies of the originals. The writing on the front is too small and the Block numbers on the back do not match the originals' bold Red Sox font.

2004 Turn Back the Clock to 1975

On June 11, 2004, the Indians played the Reds wearing their 1975-style red uniforms. Uniforms made by Majestic, but the modern players wore them two sizes baggier than the originals would have been worn in the 1970s.

Back numbers should be Varsity, not Block as is used.

2007 Civil Rights Game

- An exhibition game, this contest was played between the Indians and Cardinals just before the start of the regular season, on March 31, 2007 in Memphis, Tennessee's AutoZone Park.
- From a MLB press release: "The Major League Baseball Civil Rights Game Presented by AutoZone, which will be held annually, will pay tribute to one of our country's most significant eras of social change and honor Major League Baseball's involvement in the historic struggle through which legendary African-American players broke barriers and made important contributions to American society. The inaugural Civil Rights Game Presented by AutoZone will be played on March 31st, 2007, at AutoZone Park in Memphis, Tenn., home of the Triple-A Memphis Redbirds."
- Players wore special uniforms that bore the Civil Rights Game patch on the left sleeve, but featured only the team's city name on the front. The Cardinals jerseys were white with a bold red "St. Louis" on the front; the Indians' grays had a plain, blue "Cleveland" sewn there.
- No player names were on the back, and player numbers were large, Block style and also one color.

2007 Turn Back the Clock to 1997

June 16, 2007 was billed as a “Turn Back the Clock” game between the visiting Indians and the home Florida Marlins. The event was the commemoration of the World Series matchup between the two teams ten years prior in 1997, a contest that the Marlins won, making them World Champs in just their fifth year of existence. The Marlins wore their teal-pin-striped 1997 style vests with teal and black lettering. And while the Indians were billed as participating in the costume-party, they really didn’t, and wore their current-year blue alternates (below right) that were close at a quick glance– but not the same as their 1997 model (below left).

2007 Larry Doby Tribute

Normally, the first number in the Indians' tag code stands for the number found on the back. Since all of these jerseys sport #14, the number on the tag is the one that player normally wears.

Inside tag on game worn jerseys should display the "0062" code; Store bought jerseys have a "6200" code.

On August 10, 2007, the Indians scheduled a day to honor to Larry Doby, the first Black man to play American League baseball, for the Indians in 1947.

In tribute, all Indians players wore Doby's #14 that day.

2008 Turn Back the Clock to 1978

The Indians played the Padres on June 14 at home. Both teams wore 1978-style uniforms. The Indians wore blue pullover jerseys, made by Majestic.

The copies look very accurate, though the front lettering is slightly shorter and bolder than the originals. Of course, the 2008 players wore these uniforms in the fashionable baggy style, unlike the skintight look common to 1978. Extra credit: they even got the one-year-only 1978 style batting Wahoo sleeve patch correct.

Majestic's August 16, 2008 replica of the 1948 Indians home jersey is shown above. You be the judge as to its faithfulness to the original. The front script is close but not exact. The knit and knit trim is right, as is the sleeve patch. Back numbers on the original were Red Sox font, on the 2008 replica they are Block, like the Indians' current jerseys.

The color of the TBTC jersey is pure white, the original was a cream-colored flannel. Odd that they did not copy the color of the original better, since the Indians' new-for-2008 cream-colored alternate is a close match.

2009 Turn Back the Clock to the 1980s

On June 13, 2009, the Indians and Cardinals matched up for an interleague game on “1980s Night” in Cleveland. The Indians wore their 1986–1988 home uniforms, and the Cardinals dressed in their 1985–1991 road uniforms. Majestic did a particularly nice job with the Indians’ uniforms, making them almost indistinguishable from the originals, from 25 years prior. Perhaps the front wordmark was a fraction of an inch too small in height compared to the originals, and the player name font used by the Indians in 1986–1988 was slightly more condensed, but this is a 99-point effort. Jerseys are full-weight knits (not Cool Base) and player names are properly sewn on nameplates like the originals were. The Indians had the 2009 Herb Score memorial patch sewn to the jerseys’ right sleeves.

2010 Turn Back the Clock to 1920

- This game is played on June 12, 2010, matching the 1924 Washington Nationals against the 1920 Cleveland Indians. These years are picked because they represented the first year that each club had won its first World Series (the Washington team was at that time called the Senators).
- The Indians also wore black armbands at the time to commemorate the passing of player Ray Chapman who died in 1920 after being struck in the head with a pitched ball during a game.
- The Indians uniforms are white pinstripe with a large letter “C” on the left chest, and were made for the team by Majestic. Back numbers were Varsity style, though player numbers were not used in baseball in 1920.

2013 Turn Back the Clock to 1902 Cleveland Broncos

July 13, 2013, at home vs. the regular-uniformed Royals. According to the Ohio History Connection website:

"The Cleveland Broncos was a professional baseball team from Cleveland, Ohio. The team existed only for the 1902 season. The team played in the American League… The team won sixty-nine games and lost sixty-seven, finishing fifth in the league. The owners of the Cleveland Broncos changed the team's name to the Cleveland Naps for the 1903 season. In 1912, the Naps became known as the Cleveland Molly Maguires and then, in 1915, as the Cleveland Indians."

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1974

The Indians are the guests of the Kansas City Royals for their Turn Back the Clock to 1974 game on August 30 in Kansas City. Majestic recreates the Indians red alternate jersey uniforms for the game in near-perfect detail, aside from the fact that player wear them much looser than was the tailoring tradition in the skin-tight 1970s. Correct-for-1974 large batting Chief Wahoo disk patch on the left sleeve. Numbers on back are Varsity two-color white/navy, names are single-color white. The player name and number fonts are not the same as the team used in 1974.

2015 Negro Leagues Tribute (1946 Cleveland Buckeyes)

For the 10th time overall, and the 7th time on the road, the Indians honor the 1946 Negro League Cleveland Buckeyes with throwbacks on April 25 against Detroit, who wore throwback Detroit Stars jerseys. The lack of a manufacturer's logo on the sleeve indicates these are likely made by AIS, who has recreated many of the past Buckeyes jerseys for the Indians. Back numbers have switched between Varsity and Block bold in past years, but the 2015 entry has Varsity in navy blue.

2015 Memorial Day

After two years on the road for Memorial Day, the Indians return home for the May 25, 2015 Memorial Day game. They use their cream-color home alternate as a base with desert camo as the top layer of all twill lettering, front wordmark and back numbers. This jersey typically sports a blue outline on the lettering, but here it is changed to red. The Chief Wahoo patch remains on the left sleeve, while the Al Rosen memorial patch resides on the right. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/white from its typical team colors as used in 2013–2014.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S. based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palate might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Indians wear their road gray jerseys with the red-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in blue, including their front logo as well as back numbers. The Indians normal road jerseys feature blue lettering with red outlines, so this choice inverts the standard set-up, perhaps to accentuate the difference in the special event jersey. Player names on back are in blue on a nameplate. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve, and the Al Rosen memorial patch moves to the chest.

2017

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on the left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink, and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Indians wear their home white jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray on a nameplate, while back numbers are pink/dark gray. Unlike other teams, which change the colors of the sleeve patches to match the jersey, the Indians continue to represent Chief Wahoo in his usual colors, as they did for other similar promotions. All jersey trim, normally blue, becomes dark gray. The style returns on May 13–14, 2017 with Chief Wahoo replaced with the Block C cap logo on the left sleeve.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Indians apply the camouflage trimmings to their home white jerseys for the game on May 30. The front lettering and back numbers are rendered in woodland camo with a black outline, and player names appear in single-color black on a nameplate. Unlike other teams, their Chief Wahoo sleeve patch is retained in its typical colors (a trend that continues with other Indians' special event jerseys in 2016); however, other trim elements are changed to single-color black from the usual navy blue.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1976

On June 4 at home against the Royals, the Indians throw back to their 1976 alternate blue jerseys, while the Royals sport 1976 powder blue road uniforms.

The Indians' full knit Majestic pullovers are not very accurate reproductions. The front lettering is not as bold as the originals, and on the back, the original numbers were an extra-small version of Varsity, while names were extra-wide Block. Here, the Varsity numbers appear too large in comparison, and the name font is closer to standard Block. The two sleeve patches are accurate for the 1975 jersey, but also seem to be out of scale with the smaller originals.

2016 Father's Day

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Indians are at home and wear their alternate blue jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Indians select the red twill version with gray outlines for their front lettering and for their back numbers, with a gray player name on back on a nameplate. The gray outlines help the front lettering considerably, as without them, or had the team used blue on the blue jersey, the legibility of the stylized script would have suffered. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Because the Chief Wahoo sleeve patch is normally red, white, and blue, it is difficult to tell if this version has been color-shifted, like other teams' patches, or if it has remained the same, as the Indians did with the patch on other special event jerseys. Either way, it looks the same as it usually does, and the typical red jersey trim of the home alternate remains red here as well.

2017-2018 Negro Leagues Tributes (1946 Cleveland Buckeyes)

The Indians have frequently honored the Negro League Cleveland Buckeyes at home and on the road in the past, but this is the very first time that Majestic has done the honors of recreating this jersey. Very similar to previous versions, this full-knit gray jersey carries over the blue/red/blue trim around the neck, placket, and above the sleeve ends. However, the treatment of the script logo differs slightly in style and position on this jersey compared to previous versions made by AIS and Ebbets Field Flannels. Back number fonts have varied over the years, but this entry has a modified Varsity font style that looks more at home on an 80's basketball jersey than on a baseball field. This Indians break out this set on May 7 and July 1, 2017 (night game of doubleheader); and June 9, 2018.

2017-2018 Memorial Day

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. For this jersey, the Chief Wahoo patch is replaced by the Indians' Block C logo in olive green twill. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Indians apply this style to their home white jerseys as worn on May 27-29, 2017 and May 26–28, 2018. The "TITO" memorial patch for Tito Francona is worn on May 26, 2018 only.

2017 Father's Day

Light blue-trimmed Father's Day jerseys return on June 17 (day game) and June 18, 2017 (for the night game of their June 17 doubleheader against the home white-clad Twins, the Indians wore their blue "Indians" script alternates instead). Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic tagging and set tagging at the inside bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon glued on left chest, the light blue Majestic embroidered sleeve logo, and the dark royal blue/light blue/white back collar ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter patch. The Indians wear road gray with the front logo lettering in light blue/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while back numbers are light blue/dark gray. All jersey trim, normally blue, becomes dark gray. The Indians remove the Chief Wahoo patch for this promotion, replacing it with their Block C logo in light blue on the left sleeve.

2017-2018 Independence Day (Road)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill – appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 1 (day game of a doubleheader) and 2, 2017 and July 24, 2018, the Indians wear their road gray jersey with red patterned twill/blue front logo lettering and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color blue. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. For this jersey, the Chief Wahoo patch is replaced by the Indians' Block C logo in red twill. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

2017 Turn Back the Clock to 1917

Tris Speaker and Joe Wood, 1917

The Indians and White Sox throw it back 100 years on July 29, with both teams taking the field in 1917 uniforms. The visiting Indians wear these gray full-knit Majestic jerseys with blue pinstripes. “Cleveland” is spelled out in blue, arched Varsity letters on front, with anachronistic, but matching blue Varsity numbers on back. Hard to see here, but a small sun collar is present, as with the originals. The waving American flag patch on the left sleeve, however, was a World Series addition for the White Sox that year, and does not appear to have been part of the Cleveland uniform back then. The close-but-not-quite front lettering, and modern shorter sleeve length, take these jerseys a few more steps away from accuracy.

2017 Turn Back the Clock to the 1970s

Steve Kraljic collection

Where television was a boon to sports, color television was a blast for sports uniforms. The Indians' 1974–1977 all-red ensemble may have been one of the best examples of the Technicolor dream jerseys of this era. August 12 is the fourth time the Indians throw back to this jersey, but only the second time they bring the red pants along for the ride, though this set loses its way in terms of accuracy. Though the shape of the white/blue front lettering on these full-knit Majestic jerseys looks good, it is about 33% too small compared to the huge lettering on the originals. Likewise, the white names on back are much less bold. The small white/blue Varsity numbers come closest to the originals, though the jerseys also omit the controversial Chief Wahoo disc used on this set in 1974–1977. The wild 1970s spirit may be there, but the devil is in the details, and these uniforms are a ghost of their former selves.

2017 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017, the Indians wear jerseys with navy blue bodies and red sleeves with white nicknames and red numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide red/white/red trim. The front features their home jersey script, here rendered in red/white kiss-cut lightweight twill.

2018 Players Weekend

Players Weekend returns for a second year; a promotion intended to highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans. Brightly-colored jerseys are worn on the field on August 24–26, 2018, and once again, the Cool Base pullover jerseys are based on youth league designs with a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people with handwritten messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature an adaptation of the MLB logo showing the evolution of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic and set tags appear on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. The Indians wear jerseys that are essentially the reverse of 2017's effort, with red bodies and navy blue sleeves with white nicknames and navy blue numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide red/white/red trim. The front features their home jersey script, here rendered in navy blue/white kiss-cut twill.

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Indians wear a black version of their home jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in black/gray with gray nickname on back.

2021 Little League Classic

Held on August 22, the 2021 Little League Classic saw the Indians take on the Angels in Williamsport, VA, home of the Little League World Series. In this first Little League Classic between two AL teams, the Indians and Angels were issued special uniforms that paid tribute to the Little League regions in which the big teams played, in the Indians' case, the Great Lakes Region. This Cool Base material white pullover had blue sleeves, red V-neck opening, and a blue/red/blue "sash" insert sewn in diagonally across the front. The "Great Lakes" lettering was applied in blue/white drop shadow twill. Front and back numbers are red/blue in Block font, with blue player name on back in a rounded, condensed font. The team's "C" cap logo appears as a patch on the front right chest, forcing the Nike logo across the jersey to the left chest position.

Prototypes and Oddballs

1971 Prototype Road

Offered for sale on eBay, this jersey caught my eye because it is year tagged “1971,” yet is made of double knit by McAuliffe Uniform Co., which was official supplier at the time to the A’s and Red Sox.

It is in the exact same style as the Indians’ 1971 drab road gray uniforms. Could this have been a prototype to test the new double-knit fabric the team adopted a year later?

A discussion on the Game Used Universe forum among people in the hobby whom I respect suggests that this particular jersey was a part of a set made for a Cleveland-area softball team in the 1980s, belying the 1971 tagging. We need to be mindful that McAuliffe was a entrepreneurial sporting goods dealer, not some holy keeper of sacred Major League baseball history, and they would make anything for anybody. I have continued to include this here for your consideration, as I have no proof either way, and this story highlights one of the challenges of collecting any memorabilia for any reason other than the pleasure of the collector.

1975 Prototype Alternate / 1950s Team Basketball Warmup

Above is what we believe is a prototype jersey for the team's 1975–1977 alternate blue style, based on the presence of typical sample tagging in the neck. Aside from a lack of name on back, it matches well with what the team wore on-field.

Below is a fun oddity, which was presented as a 1950s Indians basketball warmup jersey. The date is based on the Wilson tag in the neck. In those days, MLB teams occasionally had their players involved in exhibition basketball games in the off-season, but it is unclear if this was used for such a purpose. The snaps on the back were most likely used for a removable nameplate. This artifact predates the double-knit era that we cover in this book, but this one was too odd (and fun) to ignore.

1977 Prototype Road

I have seen this particular jersey come up for sale on auction sites twice in recent years. The description claims it is from the personal collection of Jeff Torborg, who was the manager of the Indians 1977–1980. The Rawlings tag on the garment dates it from 1972–1984. It is almost beige in color, not really gray, which may be intentional or might be the result of a washday accident. The front lettering mimics the one-year 1971 Indians road jersey, though with colors reversed.

This is likely a prototype design sample, submitted by Rawlings to the Indians for consideration. Putting the team manager's name and number on a sample design submission jersey is a common practice.

I am guessing it is from 1977, as the Indians changed their uniforms for 1978, and likely were entertaining proposals from vendors that offseason.

1985 Batting Practice?

This blank-back Indians red mesh BP appears to be a design prototype offered to the team for consideration using its 1979–1993 wordmark. The style of Wilson tag in the collar narrows its year of creation to no later than 1985. The white tag in the collar is printed with the detailed engineering specs that define the fabric, trim and lettering. This jersey style was not adopted by the MLB Indians.

1986 Prototype Home

- When the Indians were accepting ideas for a new uniform design for the 1986 season, surely they received proposals from several uniform makers. Shown here is Sand-Knit's proposed design for the new season.
- The Sand-Knit offering looks very similar to the Rawlings entrant that was selected, but with a wordmark and back numbers that are slightly bolder and a unique wide front-number font that is not quite like any we have seen before.

1999 Prototype Alternate Road

For your consideration, I am including this item from Goldin Auctions. Russell's exclusive contract for branding on-field jerseys ended after 1999, and for 2000, several teams (including the Cardinals, Pirates and Diamondbacks) switched to Rawlings as their on-field supplier for 2000–2002. It is reasonable to assume that anticipating this contract opportunity, Rawlings would have been active in 1999 trying to secure on-field team contracts for the next season.

According to the auction listing it came from, it includes a handwritten note from the Indians equipment manager saying that Thome, Alomar, and other players wore Rawlings jerseys on a "test" basis in 1999. The listing does not include an image of the note, and we cannot find any photo evidence of Thome or Alomar wearing anything but Russell-sleeve branded jerseys in 1999. Hardly conclusive, as the Rawlings jerseys would have been simply provided with blank sleeves, and our search was limited by the photos available online.

Mystery Solved: Minor League Jerseys

In previous editions, we noted these white and gray mesh, two-button henley BP jerseys, which have shown up on several auction sites as game used Major League Spring Training jerseys. Further research revealed that these are, in fact, jerseys from the Minor League Burlington Indians. We leave them here to clear up the misinformation from previous editions.

Spring Training Oddball File

Left: An example of an Indians 2007–2010 style batting practice jersey but used in 2010 Spring Training, with a Varsity style player name on back, indicating to me perhaps it was added by the team (or a local supplier) while in Florida. This is not an isolated case of the Indians using non-standard batting practice jerseys in Spring Training.

Below: The photos on the bottom row are from 2014 Spring Training, and show players and coaches wearing the old 2011–2013 style BPs in Spring Training games with a Varsity player name on back, but this time in vertical arch and heat pressed. My guess: given the number of odd BP jersey variants found for the Indians and used in the spring over the years, I think the team issues players two sets of BPs for use in split-squad games against each other. Note the photo below, the player with the old-style jersey is wearing gray pants while the catcher is wearing the current style BP and white pants.

Prototype Red Jerseys

This retail-tagged jersey carries 1995–1999 Russell tail tagging, and even has paper hand tags suggesting it was a standard production item and not a singular prototype. The team never wore this style on the field.

This could be a “Frankenstein” jersey from the Majestic factory or it could be a prototype to see how the design might look. This looks to be from the 2008–2011 time frame.

2001-2003 Prototype Turn Back the Clock

This unique jersey was spotted on eBay, bearing a 2001–2003 Russell Authentic Collection tag on the front tail, but with red magic-marker strike outs on the tag, indicating a manufacturer's disposal garment. It is a black jersey with a red "C" on the front left chest, looking very much like a 1902 Cleveland Broncos/Indians jersey, perhaps a prototype for a Turn Back the Clock game that never happened. The back of this particular jersey was blank.

Fast-forwarding ahead some ten years to 2012, the Indians did indeed appear as the 1902 Broncos in a Turn Back the Clock game (featured a several pages prior to this one) wearing similar, but navy blue uniforms. This sample jersey was possibly a design exercise, and I am guessing that black was chosen as the color because the dark blue uniforms appeared that way in period black and white photographs.

2014-2016 Phantom St. Patrick's Day

Credit: Vendor "Yesterseason" on eBay

Relatively few teams actually wear green-themed jerseys on St. Patrick's Day each year in Spring Training. But that does not stop Majestic from creating and marketing ones for the other teams, and putting an "Authentic" label on them. This 2014–2016 Indians Batting Practice jersey is one such example, as the team never wore this style on the field. These examples are from an auction site; apologies for the poor quality of the photos.

2017 Sample Father's Day

During a time MLB was expanding the number of special-event uniforms across the league, the Indians were making subtle transitions to their uniforms as they (eventually) moved toward rebranding the team as "Guardians." For Father's Day in 2016, the team applied the blue-twill treatment to their home "Indians" jersey, but they kept their Chief Wahoo patch in its original colors, contrary to how other teams handled their patches. For 2017, the team was on the road, and thus applied the blue treatment to its gray "Cleveland" jerseys, as would be expected. However, like other "holiday" jerseys that year, they removed Chief Wahoo and replaced him with a Block C logo patch. Presented here is an early version of that updated jersey, one that lacks both the sleeve patch and the blue ribbon patch that was worn on-field.

This jersey's pedigree as a sample is apparent in a few details. It carries interior tagging with the tell-tale sample coding "IN-IDOF-FD-D1-3-2017" indicating it is version 3 (D1-3) of an Indians (IN) 2017 Father's Day jersey (FD).

Some unusual points include the size 44, where samples of this era were usually size 46, and the use of a current player's name and number on back, where "Player" and "17" (for the year of use) would be expected. In terms of the back lettering, it is possible that Lindor and 12 were added by a later owner, or the team requested this as the info to use. Unfortunately, the images provided were not clear enough to tell, and the auction listing did not mention anything about it.

As we have seen with other samples, in this era, Majestic was producing prototype jerseys for teams for even very minor changes like the addition of a single patch. However, because the Indians were in a time of transition in their team identity at this point, it seems likely that they may have reviewed several iterations (hence the version 3 seen here) to address their phasing out of the Chief Wahoo patch in stages, and limited-use jerseys like this one were intended to be intermediate steps toward removing their controversial imagery and working toward their new branding.

It was a glimpse of things to come for the Indians during a road series in Toronto September 6–9, 2018, when Chief Wahoo temporarily disappears from the team's left jersey sleeve. The AP article here explains the logo's absence, but does not note that the team also dropped their nameplates for these games, a change that would become permanent in 2019, along with Wahoo's ultimate departure. Despite the changes, the jersey carried the same "IDRR" code on the inventory tag as all other Indians road jerseys that season.

Indians remove Chief Wahoo from sleeve for series in Toronto

By Associated Press; Nick Viviani | Sep 07, 2018

TORONTO (AP) -- The Cleveland Indians have removed the Chief Wahoo logo from the sleeve of their uniforms for a four-game series in Toronto.

The decision to nix the logo was partially driven by a failed legal challenge against the team when it played in Toronto during the 2016 AL Championship Series. While Cleveland played the Blue Jays, a lawsuit was filed to have the logo and team name banned from Canadian TV. A judge dismissed the case.

The Indians have said they will permanently remove the logo from their uniforms next season. The move came after decades of protests and complaints that the grinning, red-faced caricature that dates to 1947 is racist. Cleveland will host the All-Star Game next season.

In recent years, the team has slowly moved away from the cartoonish image of a big-toothed American Indian with a scarlet face and a single feather in his headdress. The Indians now use a "C" as their primary logo and have removed signs depicting Chief Wahoo from their home stadium.

The Indians will return to their regular uniforms when they play at Tampa Bay next week.

2020 Alternate Road for Home Opener

The discussion of changing the Indians' name continued in 2020, a year of enhanced social justice action and activism. For their home opener that year on July 24, Indians players elected to wear their blue road alternate jerseys with "Cleveland" on the front, rather than the traditional "Indians" home whites. Many players also wore one or more of the league-wide "Black Lives Matter" and "United for Change" patches.

After talk of an Indians name change, Cleveland wears road jerseys at home

Craig Calcaterra, July 25, 2020 – NBCSports.com

Days after news arose of a potential Cleveland Indians name change, the team wore their blue road jerseys for their home opener last night. The jerseys, which say "Cleveland" on the front rather than "Indians," were worn as a statement of solidarity for minorities as the team contemplates a name change.

Indians shortstop Francisco Lindor said the players decided to switch to the jerseys after meeting with team owner Paul Dolan earlier this week to discuss the potential Indians name change, race relations and social justice. He said the move was meant to be an acknowledgment to all minorities: "Shining the light on those minorities and people who are in need, it's extremely important. That's what we're doing out there—bringing the spotlight on those people, minorities that need the spotlight on them so their voices can be heard. Positive change can happen. We're due for it."

Manager Terry Francona supported his players, saying, "the idea is to make a point, and I think this is a good way to do it." He noted, however, that there are league rules about approved uniforms for home and road games that may prohibit the club from wearing the jerseys again at home. It'll be interesting to see what, if anything, Major League Baseball has to say about it.

2021 Unused Alternate Home

In 2021, the Indians quietly introduced a new home alternate jersey with “Cleveland” across the front, mirroring their road and road alternate jerseys. Given the ongoing discussion about abandoning the “Indians” name, it is likely this was created as an alternative to the standard home jersey with “Indians” on front. This jersey was included in MLB’s style guide as an option for the team to wear on-field that season, though it was not called out as a new addition, which is the common practice when teams make any change to their logos or uniforms. The jersey was also available for fan purchase in authentic and replica versions on MLB.com and in the Indians’ own team shop, and as an option for use in the RBI 2021 video game. Where it was not seen, however, was on any Indians player. Despite being a very real jersey for the team, it was never worn in a game. The following season brought the team’s complete rebrand to “Guardians” and the white “Cleveland” alternate in this style became an on-field option that never was.

Commemorative Patches

Indians 1980 “Chief Wahoo Press Star Patches”

Mystery solved: We now have an explanation for the tiny Chief Wahoo sleeve patches that the Indians were wearing in 1980. The answer comes from reader Tom Rogers, who writes, “The small Chief Wahoos were from a weekly promotion run that season by the Cleveland Press newspaper, in which readers could vote for the ‘Press Star of the Week.’ The weekly winners would accrue patches for each week they won (à la buckeye leaves or Stargell Stars). I was a carrier for the Press during that season. If memory serves, 1980 Rookie of the Year Joe Charboneau won the honor the most times that season.”

Sure enough, Charboneau won the award five times. This is yet another case of a uni storyline you’d think we would’ve known about, and a reminder that we don’t know as much as we probably think we do.

This story and its text was borrowed from Paul Lukas’s Uni Watch* (www.uni-watch.com), my favorite guilty pleasure.

Indians/Guardians Patches

The Indians chose not to wear the 1981 All-Star patch on their jerseys that season.

- 1976: Cleveland Sports "Spirit of 76" also worn by the town's other pro sports teams
- 1983: Armband worn for former player Earl Averill after August 18
- 1993: Olin/Crews memorial (31/52) The two pitchers were killed in a Spring Training boating accident. This patch was also worn by Indians' Minor League affiliated teams in 1993. There are white and gray versions of this patch to be used with home and road uniforms. A Municipal Stadium Patch was meant to be worn to commemorate the final year in the old building. However, the Olin/Crews patch was worn instead, and the stadium patch was never worn.
- 1994: Jacobs Field Inaugural (home & alt only)
- 1995: Jacobs Field Patch (home & alt only)
- 1996: Cleveland Bicentennial - worn on left sleeve of batting practice jersey
- 1996: Champions (AL) 1995 on game uniforms
- 1997: Indians wore All Star Patch on all jerseys until All-Star Break, then switched to Jackie Robinson Patch on home white jersey only.

As I think most of you know, late last year the Indians announced that their Bob Feller memorial patch would look Like this (ed. the design at the top of the page) Everyone here seemed to like it (although I thought the Hall of Fame induction date and maybe even the uni number were superfluous). But then in early February it turned out that the team had gone with a much plainer design (design #2 on this page) , which was not well received in our comments section.

Why the switcheroo? The answer, or at least a portion of it, came on Friday, buried toward the bottom of (a news article.) Here's the key passage: "The Indians want to honor Hall of Famer Bob Feller by wearing a silhouette of him pitching, including his high leg kick, on the sleeve of their regular season uniform jerseys, but they're having trouble getting copyright permission."

I wanted to know more, so I contacted Bart Swain, the Indians' PR director, who explained that the silhouetted image on the patch is based on a photograph that's owned by Photo File, and the team hasn't been able to strike a licensing deal with them.

My initial thought was, "Eh, big deal — so you find a different photo and make a silhouette of that." Like, the Indians must own the rights to some good photos of Rapid Robert, right? But then I did a bit of Feller photo research, and there's no getting around it: The Photo File image really does seem to be the best, most iconic shot of him. There are a few similar images, but they're not quite as good. It's easy to see why the Indians might think, "If we can't have that one, let's just scrap the whole concept and come up with something else."

Photo File, of course, is in the business of selling and licensing photos, so it's not as though the primo Feller image is off-limits to the Indians — it's just a matter of whether the team is willing to pay a licensing fee. Swain, the Tribe's PR guy, told me that negotiations with Photo File are ongoing, so it's possible that the silhouette-based patch design may end up being used after all. Either way, this is probably one of the most convoluted design processes ever for a memorial patch. Which I guess is what happens if you don't just go with a black circle, right?

Feller, incidentally, was somewhat notorious for being an autograph mercenary in his later years. He'd show up anywhere, anytime, for an autograph session — if the price was right. On some level, he'd probably be amused by the haggling going on over his likeness. And he'd also probably wonder why he isn't getting a cut.

Clockwise from top left: The copyrighted famous photo, the late 2010 mock-up of the proposed patch, including HOF date (1). Middle row: The Spring Training patch (2) was used without the image while the Indians were deciding if they were willing to pay the licensing fee, and on the bottom row (3-4), the patches as finally used on regular season game uniforms. The red outline one is used on the home creams and road blues, the solid blue outline is used on home whites and road grays.

2023-2025 Guardians Advertising Patches

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Guardians struck a sponsor patch deal with Marathon, a petroleum company. The patches first appeared on July 3, 2023. The sponsor calls this their “Endurance” logo. It is a red “M” with “Marathon” beneath in royal blue, with a royal blue/powder blue border.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team’s normal logo patches remain on each jersey, on the opposite sleeve from the ad patch.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Ted Uhlaender #26 Indians 1970 Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: May 30, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0301J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Size 42 heather-blue/gray colored flannel seven-button Spalding jersey, "CLEVELAND" is arched across both panels of the front in a three color pattern, red outlined with white and then with a black 3D drop shadow. On back are the numbers 26, also in the same colors with a 3D black shadow. The fonts match exemplars and my templates. The smiling red/white/navy felt-backed Chief Wahoo patch is stitched to the left sleeve and appears original. Four-hole gusseted vent inserts sewn under each arm. The Cleveland Indians of the 1970s were a frugal organization that wasted nothing. Game used team jerseys from the decade are almost never found in their original configuration in the hobby because nearly all were repurposed by the Indians, some several times over, before their service was through. A set of these 1970 road jerseys were stripped and reused as 1971 Indians road jerseys, which featured a completely different front crest and back numbers. Others were sent to the minor leagues and reconfigured completely. Unexplainably, this one is completely original with all 1970 elements untouched, and is the first such original example I have ever evaluated. While I do not have other Uhlaender jerseys in my database, the size of this is reasonable given his size and weight, 6' 2", 190 lbs. Its 32" length is 1 inch longer than typical. Outfielder Ted Uhlaender enjoyed an 8-year MLB career with the Twins, Indians and Reds. 1970 was his first season with the Indians, and he appeared in 141 games hitting .268 with two home runs.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Spading locker tag noting the size as 42 is the correct style for 1970, is stitched to the outside of the left front tail. Beneath it is the Spalding white with blue printing wash tag, and pinched under the right side of this tag is a white flag tab that says SET1 #8P 1970. The reverse side of the fabric shows puckering beneath these tags, indicating that they have been through many washings, and a close examination shows that they are original.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows signs typical of a season's heavy use. It is in good condition without damage or repairs, and the gray fabric retains it bluish hue. There is some minor splitting if the felt sleeve patch on its top edge. The three-layer twill lettering shows the effects of hot water washing, it is somewhat puckered and the thread holding it to the shirt has bleached to a lighter shade. Notably the black edge is stitched using an "invisible" nylon thread. There is some visible wear and ground in dirt inside the collar and sleeve ends from game use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good original and unrestored condition. The jersey has no contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and originally worn by outfielder Ted Uhlaender of the 1970 Cleveland Indians.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Indians 1970 #10 Game Worn Road Jersey, Rich Rollins

Examination Date: May 1, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0501J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Size 44 heather-blue/gray colored flannel seven-button Spalding jersey, with a white size 44 flag tag stitched underneath the right side of the Spalding maker's tag. Below and near the bottom hem is the well-worn Spalding washing instructions tag machine-embroidered in red with a blue border. Pinched under the right side of this tag is a white flag tab that says SET1 #8P 1970. The smiling red/white/navy felt-backed Chief Wahoo patch is stitched to the left sleeve and appears original. The Cleveland Indians of the 1970s were a frugal organization that wasted nothing. Game used team jerseys from the decade are almost never found in their original configuration in the hobby because nearly all were repurposed by the Indians, some several times over, before their service was through. This jersey is no exception.

As Received: Tagged in the front tail as a a 1970 jersey, a light table examination revealed this jersey had been improperly re-lettered. On back, a set of 3D style numbers "40" were significantly larger than original issue. On front, a three-color "Cleveland" wordmark arched across both panels was revealed on the light table to be un-original; points of mismatch with an likely original set of ghosts could be seen. Notably, many 1970 Indians road jerseys were completely stripped, back and front, and converted to 1971 Indians jerseys, which had a much simpler single-color front wordmark, and single color back numbers. There is no sign that this jersey had been converted to 1971 livery before it was improperly restored to 1970 specifications. My conclusion is that it was stripped for re-use, but then left blank.

I was asked to determine its origin and to restore it to its original appearance. I stripped all the replacement lettering, front and back. Using my original templates for both the 1970 Indians front crest and the back numbers, I was able to detect the original lettering ghosts. The number 10 had been on the back, visible with faint stitch lines and a couple of small holes where thread was likely ripped out.

Backup infielder Rich Rollins was signed by the Indians on May 13, 1970 after his release by the Twins, and issued #10. At 5' 10" and 185 lbs this jersey is sized appropriately for the player. 1970 was the final year in Rollins' 10-year career, one spent mostly with the Twins. He was also a member of the inaugural Seattle Pilots squad of 1969. In 1970 he appeared in 42 games for the Indians, mostly as a pinch hitter, hitting .233 and two home runs in 43 at bats This jersey would have been appropriately sized for him to have worn.

Restoration: Using my historically recreated patterns for both the 1970 Indians one-year style front wordmark and the back numbers, I was able to find multiple points of intersection comparing the templates to the faint shadows of the original stitching lines. I cut and stitched new lettering, front and back, then media blasted and lightly organically dyed them to simulate age and use and to make the new more harmonious with the wear on the jersey body all was to be sewn to. I attached all the new lettering with off-color bleached and muted thread tones to replicate age and use.

Above left, the jersey as received, prior to its restoration. At left and below, after removal of the lettering, ghosts of the original lettering visible on the light table show the proper shapes and placement. All replacement lettering was media blasted and lightly organically dyed to add patina appropriate to the age and condition of the jersey to which they were being

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition, better than average compared to others I have evaluated. It is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and originally worn by infielder Rich Rollins of the 1970 Cleveland Indians.

Letter of Professional Opinion

1971 Cleveland Indians Kerby Farrell (Coach) Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: July 2, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0702J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson size 42 (tagged and measured) seven button flannel jersey, white with navy chalk pinstripes. "INDIANS" is vertical arched across both panels of the front in Navy cotton-blend twill. Six gusseted vent holes are sewn into each underarm panel. Chief Wahoo patch in old style navy/white/red embroidery on a felt backing is stitched to the left sleeve, and appears to be original. On the back is the number 15, a replacement. On the inside of the front left tail someone has written boldly in black marker "GREG (sic) NETTLES SPR. TRG UNIFORM". The black marker from this ersatz inscription has soaked through to the outside of the fabric making it visible from the front.

The Indians wore this style of jersey one season only- 1971, then again in spring training 1972. For the 1972 regular season the team switched to new, pullover Wilson double knit jerseys. 1971 jerseys are rare to find in such good condition, as the Indians sent them to the minor leagues to be reused. Very few survived in any condition. This one seems to have been spared excessive reuse. A light table evaluation shows that this jersey originally had #3 on the back, a number issued to coach Kerby Farrell. Farrell was 5' 11" and had a playing weight in 1945 of 172, making this a reasonable size for him to have worn at age 58 in 1971. Farrell left the staff after 1971, and very likely this jersey was renumbered to 15 and reissued for use in 1972 spring Training. #15 on that 1972 squad was newly acquired infielder Frank Duffy, 6' 1" and 180 lbs who would have fit in this reissued jersey. Marker inscription notwithstanding- Graig Nettles was on the Indians 1970-1972, but he was #12, and would most likely have been reissued his own 1971 uniform for use in 1972 Spring Training. There is no sign that #12 was ever sewn on this jersey. I would judge that the hand-written inscription is incorrect.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Wilson locker tag noting the size as 42 is the correct style for 1971, is stitched to the outside of the left front tail. Beneath it is a 1.5" white piece of braided trim with "1971" hand chain stitched on it in a style matching other period Indians jersey in our reference library. The reverse side of the fabric shows puckering beneath these tags, indicating that they have been through many washings, and a close examination shows that they are original.

bill@TheDream.Shop

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows signs typical of a season's careful use— by a coach. It is in very good condition and has not been excessively laundered because likely it never got very dirty. The cotton blend twill of the front team crest is beached to a dark violet, and all of the stitching holding it in place is still tight. The light table reveals the former #3 centered on the back, and the current #15 was stitched on in typical "clubhouse" spring-training fashion (vs. professionally done by Wilson) the stitching is uneven and appears done in a hurry, without particular care to follow the edges of the numbers. These numbers may well have been take-off numbers from other jerseys as they are bleached purple, and the sheen has been burnished from them, and have two sets of stitching holes around the perimeters. One corse of stitching holding them in place is light purplish white; likely cotton thread that was bleached in the wash. It appears that perhaps they were hurriedly stitched on, and then perhaps later they were restitched more carefully without anyone removing the first corse of (now) lighter thread. Looking at the inside of the jersey, there is puckering of the jersey fabric beneath the numbers showing that the numbers shrunk more than the jersey in the wash, a typical occurrence with hot water washing. The front tail "inscription" already mentioned is an unfortunate event.

Left: Clear ghost of the "3" that had been stitched here prior, remains. Right: Double row of stitching is typical of spring training, clubhouse re-lettering of a previously issued jersey. Below, the marker inscription (which I have deemed inaccurate) on both the inside and showing through to the outside; it resisted removal.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered, though team re-numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits game use. In my professional opinion, this is the game-worn 1971 home jersey of Cleveland Indians coach Kerby Farrell.

Cleveland Indians 1971 Road Jersey, #40 (Ken Harrelson or Jim Clark)

Examination Date: September 23, 2021 Certification Number:21-0923J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: As received, 1971 year tagged Spalding seven-button heather gray size 44 Cleveland Indians jersey. The number "40" in the proper Indians font is on the back, but a light table examination suggests that while the front crest is original, other numbers have been on this in the past. The seven dark gray buttons appear all original. Chief Wahoo patch is stitched to the left sleeve and is original. The 1970s Indians were a frugal organization that used and reissued their uniforms multiple times. At least one set of 1971 road uniforms was created from stripped 1970 road jerseys. However, this one began life as a 1971 from the start. This style of jersey was worn only in 1971. The fact that the "CLEVELAND" wordmark remains on front without any signs of another crest having been there suggests that this jersey avoided being sent to the minor leagues, and the replacement back numbers were most likely a result of later-year issuance in MLB spring training. As 1972 was the team's switch over to regular season knits, the old flannels were probably used only a single year, 1972, in spring training.

Restoration Performed: Recognizing that a number change had occurred at some point, the jerseys's owner requested that the back numbers be temporarily removed so a full light table examination could be done. Once removed, the following was observed:

1. It is clear that the second number has always been a zero. And somebody took the trouble to remove an old zero that was crooked and put a new one on that matched the 4 sewn in the first position.
2. While you can see clearly the stitching lines from am earlier old distorted/crooked zero underneath the darker outline from the later numeral 0 sewn on top, you cannot see any clear evidence of another number ghost that had been underneath the left digit 4.
3. There are several small holes near, but not overlaying, the outline of the number four. Holes like this generally indicate where stitching thread from a removed number had turned a corner. It is where the stitching is densest and when the old number is removed it often makes a hole in that spot because the fabric is weak there. Therefore we considered it was possible that at one time another digit had been in the leading position.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

With numbers removed for light table evaluation, the ghost of a different "0" can be seen. Small holes surrounding the "4"suggest another digit may have been stitched there, but a thoughtful evaluation concludes that no other numeral would have made these marks and that the original digit was a 4 as well.

In the end, after overlaying other digits in the matching font onto that spot and being unable to make a match to the ghosted holes, we are satisfied that to the best of our knowledge, the original number on this jersey had been 40 and that the current numerals 40 that had been stitched there were cut from 1971 vintage cotton twill fabric and had been on the jersey for quite some time. Therefore, we had decided to resew the removed vintage 40 in place. In 1971, #40 was worn by both infielder Ken Harrelson and pitcher Jim Clark. Both men were approximately the same size and weight and the size of this shirt is appropriate to fit either one.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Spalding "Professional" tag as correct for 1971 with a small size 44 tag stitched centered under the right edge, and a square "71"indicating the year of issue stitched to its left. The Indians did not player-tag their jerseys in 1971.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey body is in unusually good condition, given the Indians' typical overuse of their equipment. The lettering is made of cotton twill, and has faded to a typical dark violet hue from washing in detergents. The stitching is tight and similarly bleached. My reattachment of the back numbers was made using faded thread to match and matching the size/frequency of the original stitching as closely as possible. There are no team repairs to the jersey.

Conclusion: The jersey has the correct tagging and lettering as used by the 1971 Cleveland Indians. It shows signs of use but is in very good condition. My detailed evaluation has concluded that while the back numbers had been replaced at some point, the original number of this jersey was indeed #40. It is free of contrivance, and in my opinion is an excellent example of a game worn 1971 Cleveland Indians road jersey.

Indians 1970 #46 Game Worn Road Jersey, Steve Dunning

Examination Date: August 17, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0817-J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: The Cleveland Indians of the 1970s were a frugal organization that wasted nothing. Game used team jerseys from the decade are almost never found in their original configuration in the hobby because nearly all were repurposed by the Indians, some several times over, before their service was through. This jersey is no exception. Tagged in the front tail as a a 1970 jersey, as received it wore the lettering, back and front of the one-year 1971 style. It had #55 on back. No roster player wore #55 on the 1971 Indians, it may have been worn by a coach or was more likely issued to a spring training invitee, given its mismatched numbers. Size 44 heather-gray colored flannel Spalding jersey, with a white size 44 flag tag stitched underneath the right side of the Spalding maker's tag. Below and near the bottom hem is the well-worn Spalding washing instructions tag machine-embroidered in red with a blue border. Pinched under the right side of this tag is a white flag tab that says SET1 #8P 1970. The smiling red/white/navy felt-backed Chief Wahoo patch is stitched to the left sleeve and appears original.

As Received: I was asked to determine its origin and to restore it to its original appearance. Examining it on the light table, it was clear that the unique and attractive 1970-only 3-D style Cleveland lettering had once been on the front. The current front wordmark, stitched overly tightly in worn Navy blue cotton twill was the 1971 variation. The back number, 55, also a replacement, was crudely applied also with far too many stitches, and the two digits were sourced from different font sets, each unlike the other. The back numbers in 1970 had been in a much different font, three-color 3D red/white/Navy. I was initially unable to determine what the original back numbers were, so on the direction of its owner, I proceeded to remove all lettering, front and back, to further research and to begin to return the jersey to it original 1970 configuration.

(Top) jersey as restored and (bottom) as received. Three color twill lettering with drop shadows were used on 1970 jerseys only, 1971's were much less ornate. The Indians stripped their 1970 jerseys and re-lettered them for reissue in the 1971 season. Bottom photo shows the marking inside the tail.

On the light table, careful evaluation revealed that the number 46 had originally been there. #46 in 1970 was pitcher Steve Dunning, 6'-02" and 205 lbs., This jersey would have been appropriately sized for him to have worn. Dunning was a starting pitcher for the 1971 Indians, compiling a record of 8-14 in 31 games pitched, 29 as a starter. He enjoyed a seven-year MLB career, 1970-1977.

Restoration: Using my historically recreated patterns for both the front wordmark and the back numbers, I was able to find multiple points of intersection comparing the templates to the faint shadows of the original stitching lines. I cut and stitched new lettering, front and back, then media blasted and lightly organically dyed them to simulate age and use and to make the new more harmonious with the wear on the jersey body all was to be sewn to. I attached all the new lettering with off-color bleached and muted thread tones to replicate age and use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good condition. It is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and originally worn by pitcher Steve Dunning of the 1970 Cleveland Indians.

Ghosts of the original lettering visible on the light table identify this jersey as one of the repurposed 1970 jerseys reissued in 1971 livery. The shadows assisted with the proper placement of all restored elements. All replacement lettering was media blasted and lightly organically dyed to add patina appropriate to the age and condition of the jersey to which they were being sewn.

Letter of Professional Opinion and Document of Restoration

Gaylord Perry 1972 Cleveland Indians Game Worn Home Jersey, Cy Young Year

Examination Date: December 13, 2020 Certification Number: 20-1213J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Wilson size 46 white pullover Cleveland Indians jersey of #36, Hall of Fame pitcher Gaylord Perry. Wide, 3" Red/White/Navy knit sleeve ends, similarly colored 1" wide knit v-neck. Jersey is autographed in blue sharpie, "Gaylord Perry" on the lower center of the chest. (I have no opinion of the authenticity of the autograph). On back, #36 and "PERRY" arched above in red tackle twill. Perry won the American League Cy Young award in 1972 when he went 24-16, starting 40 games and completing 29 of them.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson manufacturer tag showing the size 46 sewn in the back of the neck. There is no other team tagging on 1972 Indians jerseys.

Wear & Repairs/Restoration Performed: 1972 Indians jerseys are a seldom seen, one-year style. Most are non-existent in their original configuration because the team frugally stripped them and re-lettered them in the new style for 1973 then reissued them.

This jersey was purchased by its current owner at auction and was restored. On front, with careful examination the original vertical-arched Block "INDIANS" had been restored exactly over the original ghosts. There remains clear visible ghost stitching evidence of the 1973 and later stylized Indians lettering that had been on the front of this jersey that was removed when the original-style lettering was restored. The jersey shows a good deal of use, and has had its V-Neck collar cut open as was preferred by Perry, and as is evident in photos of Perry wearing his home jersey in 1972.

On back, as received, was clear evidence of an inexact restoration. The restorer had used stock fonts and arbitrary placement of name and number instead of matching the clear ghosts of Perry's original name and number that had once been there. I removed the back name and number. Light table examination revealed a Varsity #17 had been once been sewn on the back, 2" higher as when so issued, it was used without a name on back. Notably, there is no evidence that the large Indians disk patch used by the MLB club in 1973 was ever on the left sleeve. Therefore, it is a reasonable conclusion that this jersey was not used by the MLB Indians after 1972, but instead found its way directly to the minor leagues for its second life. (See attached photos of this jersey's auction in 2013).

I recreated the actual (one year use) 1972 fonts for name and number using the clearly visible ghosts and stitched them in place. No attempt was made to clean the jersey at all because of the presence of the autograph.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good used condition, is properly lettered, and numbered, and has now been properly restored. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and was worn by Gaylord Perry of the Cleveland Indians during his 1972 Cy Young Award winning season.

1972 Cleveland Indians Game Worn Road Jersey, #38 Phil Hennigan

Examination Date: August 17, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0817J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Gray pullover Rawlings pro-model full-weight double knit jersey in size 46. Red/white/Navy sewn in knit trim at the sleeve ends and the V-neck. 1972 was the first year for the Cleveland Indians in double knit uniforms, switching away from the old button front flannels.

As Received: There are almost no original 1972 Indians jerseys in the hobby. It was a one-year style, and after 1972 the team stripped them and recycled them into 1973 Indians jerseys or sent them to the minor leagues where most were abused to death. This one remains in good condition, but a light-table evaluation reveals that both the front and back had been incorrectly restored at some point. The front INDIANS word arch had been placed over the original ghosts, but was too light in stroke. Removing the front lettering clearly revealed the somewhat perforated shadow of "San Antonio", an Indians minor league affiliate who had re-issued this jersey after 1972.

Stitched on back was the player number 9 (autographed) and the arched name "Bell" above it. The light table again revealed this was not original to the jersey, and after removing the back lettering it was clearer it had been #51 in the minors, and originally had been issued to #38, pitcher Phil Hennigan. Overall the jersey body remains in good condition, with no repairs and surprisingly bright trim.

Top- as restored, Bottom- as received.

Hennigan was 6' 0" and 185 lbs, so this jersey is sized appropriately for the player. He pitched for the Indians 1969-1972. According to Wikipedia, "...Although 1972 was arguably Hennigan's best season, it would also be his last with the Indians. In 38 games, he went 5-3 with a 2.67 ERA. In 67 1/3 innings of work, he struck out 44 batters, walking only 18, and also saved five games."

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The 1972-correct Rawlings red tag is stitched to the outside of the bottom left tail. A small white flag tab is sewn under the right edge of the Rawlings tag, and reads SET 1 #8P 1972.

Restoration Performed: The stripped jersey was washed and steamed to remove dirt and overt stitching traces of the old restoration lettering. Using the ghosts on front to verify my patterns, I cut and restitched the proper red Indians arched lettering. On back, the player number 38 and name HENNIGAN was cut from the original team patterns in my archives, and sewn precisely over the ghosts using the light table as my guide. Before stitching with bleached red thread, all lettering was media blasted and lightly organically dyed to simulate age and wear and to make the lettering restoration more harmonious with the condition of the jersey body.

Clockwise from far left:- Hennigan in a 1972 Indians press kit photo postcard, wearing his home uniform. The wordmark of the San Antonio minor league club, Light table reveals original Indians shadows in black, Sam Antonio minor league ghost in white. Name on back ghosts of the original configuration leading H and final N are highlighted; final placement of back restoration lettering are shown at bottom left.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is authentic and game worn, in good used condition, and has been restored to its appearance as when it was worn by pitcher Phil Hennigan of the 1972 Cleveland Indians.

Cleveland Indians 1972 Bobby Hofman Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: May 24, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0524J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White pullover Cleveland Indians jersey of #6, coach Bobby Hofman. Wide, 3" Red/White/Navy knit sleeve ends, similarly colored 1" wide knit v-neck. On back, #6 and "HOFMAN" arched above in red tackle twill. Normally, the Wilson manufacturer tag showing the size would be sewn in the back of the neck. It is gone from this jersey, and extreme wear has left little sign that it was ever present. There is no other team tagging used on 1972 Indians jerseys.

Wear & Repairs/Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey was in a "1" in a "1 out of 10" condition. 1972 Indians jerseys are a seldom seen, one-year style. Most are non-existent in their original configuration because the team frugally stripped them and either sent them to the minor leagues or re-lettered them in the MLB team's new style for 1973 then reissued them. This particular jersey was sent to Oklahoma City (AAA) and was re-lettered and reissued as an Eighty-Niners jersey. All of the original INDIANS lettering was removed, and the giant "EIGHTY NINERS" lettering in red over blue was applied to the front with an excessive amount of glue. "89ers" was also sewn to the left sleeve. The original number 6 was removed from the back, and a different number 6 was sewn in its place. No name was on back.

Removing the lettering, I found the glue on both the back and front was pancake thick, literally buttered onto the back of the lettering before it was applied. This sometimes happens when take-off lettering is reused a second or third time, typical of the minor leagues. I used multiple types of strong solvents to dissolve the glue and using a high-pressure dry cleaning solvent gun worked to remove as much of the staining and glue as possible. I then aggressively spot-bleached the fabric to try to get its color evenly back to its original white, then plate-steamed the jersey surfaces to remove as many of the stitching imprints as I could. Many small holes and perforations remain, as do a number of tiny Navy thread fragments from the Eighty Niners lettering, literally embedded in the jersey fabric.

Using team patterns recreated from period photos and other jerseys, I cut and replaced the front Indians crest as well as the player name and number on the back atop the original shadows still slightly visible on the light table. In typical Indians fashion, the name on back is lopsided and in a haphazard arc. While it cold have been "corrected", it was re-sewn exactly as originally done.

(Top row) As received for restoration, the jersey was in deplorable condition. Had this not been a very rare 1972 Indians MLB jersey originally, this restoration would. Likely not have been attempted. (Bottom left and center) Full strength paint stripper paste was brushed on to dissolve enough of the glue that it could be scraped off and the process could continue with standard solvents. Bottom right: The ghost of the original Indians' "6" in the proper font is partially hidden beneath a replacement 6 on top. Often, before being set to the minors, the full set of team jerseys was pre-stripped of all lettering so they could be re-lettered in the minor league city, and that's probably why the 6 on the back is not the original one.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in fair but properly restored condition: stripped, cleaned and is properly restored with lettering near identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by coach Bobby Hofman of the 1972 Cleveland Indians.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Oklahoma City 89ers/Chris Chambliss 1972 Cleveland Indians Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: February 13, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0213J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Oklahoma City Eighty-Niners (Indians AAA 1973-1975) minor league home white jersey, based on its wear characteristics, likely worn in multiple of these three years, with a red #22 on the back, very large and bold "Eighty Niners" spelled out on the front in huge 4" stylized letters in red outlined with navy blue. Navy-white-red 3/4" V-neck and 2 1/2" wide sleeve end trim complete the look. Large layered twill "89ers" stitched on the left sleeve in the same two colors. A light table examination shows that this began life as a 1972 Cleveland Indians jersey, and was originally lettered for #14 Chris Chambliss. While this same jersey "shell" was used for 1972-1974, it can be narrowed down to having been issued and worn by the MLB Indians in 1972. The jersey has been washed so much that only faint shadows of the original lettering indicate the original presence of the Indians one-year 1972 wordmark, mostly hidden underneath the heavy-handed bold Eighty-Niners lettering now there. The sleeve bears no evidence of an Indians 1973-74 sleeve disk patch having been sewn there, the lack of a sleeve patch is also a 1972-only jersey characteristic. The ghosts of the back name and numbers also match exemplars photos of the 1972 Indians player lettering. The tall and narrow name on back and the small numbers were used only on knit 1972 jerseys, the fonts were different (larger and bolder) in 1973-1974.

Chambliss began his career with the Indians in 1971, when he won the American League Rookie of the Year Award, and played for the Indians through 1974 when he was traded to the Yankees.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: There is ghost-stitching hole evidence of the former presence of the Wilson rectangular neck tag, now gone due to heavy wash-wear. The jersey measurements make it appear to be a size 40, appropriate for Chambliss at the very start of his career. There is no team tagging on the jersey as is correct for 1972 Indians jerseys.

Wear & Repairs: Collectors have for decades bemoaned the near total absence of 1972 Cleveland Indians jerseys in the hobby, and this relic provides a glimpse into why none are to be found. While this jersey spent a year of its life decades ago as a MLB Indians jersey, it probably lived on for three seasons in its current minor league livery. It is intact, relatively unstained even-overall-ivory color with surprisingly bright trim. The layered twill lettering on the front is faded, puckered, burnished and bleached with some cracking and team repair of splits and loose edges. The back numbers are puckered from repeated hot water washing.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in fair to good heavily used condition, and is currently lettered for player #22 of the 1973-1975 minor league Oklahoma City Eighty Niners. It shows clear evidence of its origins of a 1972 Cleveland Indians jersey issued to and worn by #14 Chris Chambliss.

Cleveland Indians Jerry Johnson 1973 Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: March 1, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0301J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Home pullover size 46 Cleveland Indians home jersey originally issued to #32 pitcher Jerry Johnson. Off-white body with red/white/Navy sewn-in knit trim at the sleeve ends and V-neck. "INDIANS" arched on the front in the team's 1973-1977 stylized font. On back, the restored name and number JOHNSON 32 in the original font style in Navy twill. Large sized Chief Wahoo disk that appears to be original is sewn on the left sleeve.

Johnson was 6' 3" and 200 lbs, and this jersey would have been appropriately sized for him. He enjoyed a ten year MLB career, playing for seven teams. He was a member of the Indians only during 1973 where he appeared in 39 games, all but one as a reliever and mostly as a closer. He compiled a 5-6 record in 1973 with a 6.18 ERA. (Baseball Almanac)

Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey had #52 on back and no name. It shows signs of having at least two sets of prior numbers and name on back. The fabric is worn and grayed from use, with a slight purplish cast (typical of hot water washing) that is darker towards the tails. A light table examination showed that JOHNSON #32 was the original owner, and stripped of its current numbers it showed a great deal of dark dye staining from what had been there before. I aggressively cleaned the stains using multiple methods, but ghosts of what had been there over the years are still evident on close inspection. Using the light table and my original team patterns, I recreated the original player back lettering and then aged the fabric with media blasting and organic dyeing before stitching it in place exactly over the original ghosts using bleached-color thread.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings red tag correct for 1973 is stitched inside the front left tail. Pinch-sewn under its right edge is a flag tab that says SET 1 #8P 1973.

Comments: Indians jerseys of this vintage are rarely found intact. The team sent all of its gear to be reused in either spring training, the minor leagues or both. Surviving examples typically show excessive wear and evidence of multiple re-issues and number changes. This one had mismatched back numbers and in my judgement was wearing its third set of numbers prior to restoration. The second digit "2" was not the original one, and little effort was made by whoever stitched it to cover the old marks when it was re-lettered with fonts from a different font set. The fact that this one survives with its original front wordmark intact is a bonus not often seen.

Top: as received, and below, light table views with the replacement numbers removed shows evidence of earlier use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in fair, game used condition: the front is all original, and the back is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. Indians 1974 Home Game Worn Jersey, #13 Bruce Ellingsen

Examination Date: August 17, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0817-J04

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White double knit pullover Rawlings size 42 Cleveland Indians home jersey in the style worn by the team 1973-1977. As received, it wears #13 on the back with light table evidence of a 47 having been present, prior. Because the 13 was sewn over the earlier 47 without re-centering, it is almost 2 inches off center to the right. There is no name on the back, though there is evidence of multiple names having been removed from the back. Baseball Almanac confirms that Ellingsen wore both these numbers in the 1974 season. It is clear that this jersey was reissued multiple times when its MLB service was through. Player name and numbers are in cotton blend twill used by the Indians prior to 1975, instead of the more common 100% polyester tackle twill.

The Cleveland Indians of the 1970s were a frugal organization that wasted nothing. Game used team jerseys from the decade are almost never found in their original configuration in the hobby because nearly all were repurposed by the Indians, some several times over, before their service was through. This jersey is no exception.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The well-worn Rawlings "Mark of a Pro" red tag as used in the mid-70s is stitched inside the back of the neck and indicates the size as 42. A white flag tab is stitched under the right of this tag, reading SET 1 #8P 1974". The Indians did not player-tag their jerseys in 1974.

Wear and Repairs: The front INDIANS wordmark appears original and is burnished and bleached to a shade of dark violet from use. The once bright-white fabric has weathered to a pale gray stained with a pinkish cast in the tails. . In typical Indians-style for jerseys of this time period, the player numbers and name on back appear to have been placed "by eye" without the aid of any drafting tools. The ghost arc of the player name is extremely irregular, crooked and imbalanced. As received, the large Chief Wahoo disk was missing from the left sleeve, and a large perforated hole remained. There were multiple holes in the back where names had been removed, including one the size of a quarter. The ghosts of "Ellingsen" can clearly be seen, but we did not attempt to determine the other name(s) that may have been there. It was likely reissued post-1974 still with the number 13 and probably a name on back, and from the excessive wear it received, was likely worn in the minor leagues and/or spring training in multiple additional years.

In my restoration, I performed extensive (team style repair) fabric darning to close up the many holes on back and sleeve. The player name was recreated from the original team alpha template of 1974 and cut using dyed and matching cotton blend twill, then sewn with matching bleached thread. A vintage Wahoo disk patch was sewn back to the sleeve.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in extremely heavily used condition. Its examination shows that it was used by several players after its original issuance in 1974. It has been professionally restored. it is It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications, first issued in 1974 and worn by pitcher Bruce Ellingsen of the Cleveland Indians.

As received and prior to restoration, the jersey exhibits heavy use with staining and multiple holes.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Indians 1975-1977 #39 Game Worn Home Jersey, Al Fitzmorris

Examination Date: August 17, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0817-J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White double knit pullover Wilson size 44 Cleveland Indians home jersey in the style worn by the team 1973-1977. The Cleveland Indians of the 1970s were a frugal organization that wasted nothing. Game used team jerseys from the decade are almost never found in their original configuration in the hobby because nearly all were repurposed by the Indians, some several times over, before their service was through. This jersey is no exception. Light table examination reveals the shadows of multiple name and number changes; it has been issued at least three times. Because its final owner, Al Fitzmorris was a roster player on the 1977-1978 Indians, and the lettering in place on the jersey appeared vintage and authentic, its current owner elected not to remove the exiting lettering in order to find the identity of to whom it may have originally been issued. It appears it may have been originally numbered as #4, worn by two players in 1975 season.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's locker tag correct for the time period, noting the size as 44 is stitched inside the back of the neck. The Indians did not team tag their jerseys 1972-1975. Because this jersey has no year tag on it, nor evidence that one had ever been there, and Fitzmorris played wearing this style of jersey in 1977, it is a reasonable conclusion that this jersey was originally issued by the Indians in 1975, and that Fitzmorris was at least its third owner. Someone has written a tiny "75" inside the neck next to the Wilson tag in black marker; this is not a common team marking so its origin is unclear.

Wear and Repairs: The front INDIANS wordmark appears original and is burnished and bleached to a shade of dark violet from use. The once bright-white fabric has weathered to an ivory-pale gray. In typical Indians-style for jerseys of this time period, the player numbers and name on back appear to have been placed "by eye" without the aid of any drafting tools. The number is slightly off center to the left, and the player name arc is unbalanced, off center and clock-rotated to the right. The current player name and number are team applied, but evidence of at least two other names/numbers are evident on the light table. It lacks clear evidence of the 1976 Bicentennial sleeve patch worn by the team ever having been present.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in fair condition. Its examination shows that it was used by several Indians players it is It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications, first issued in 1975, and worn in 1977 by pitcher Al Fitzmorris of the Cleveland Indians.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Harvey Haddix (Pitching Coach) Cleveland Indians 1975-1977 Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: April 29, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0429J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White double knit pullover Wilson size 42 (marked and measured) Cleveland Indians home jersey in the style worn by the team 1973-1977. 2 1/4" red white and blue knit sleeve end trim, 1" V-neck trim in the same colors. The Cleveland Indians of the 1970s were a frugal organization that wasted nothing. Game used team jerseys from the decade are almost never found in their original configuration in the hobby because nearly all were reissued/ repurposed by the Indians, some several times over, before their service was through. In rare examples some were reissued for multiple seasons to the same person, sparing them from being stripped and re-lettered for another player. This jersey is one such example: it was issued to pitching coach Harvey Haddix who wore this style during his tenure 1975-1977 (Haddix was still with the Indians in 1978, but the team wore different style jerseys then.) A light table examination shows it is wearing its original back lettering. As received by me it had the clear outline ghost of the Indians' 1976 "Spirit of '76" sleeve patch, and I restitched an original patch (not reproduction) exactly covering the ghost. The Indians disk patch is on the left sleeve as worn 1974-1977 on this style of jersey. At a svelte playing weight of 170 labs and at 5'9", he was a reasonable size to have worn this size 42 jersey.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's locker tag correct for the time period, noting the size as 42 is stitched inside the back of the neck. The Indians did not team tag their jerseys 1972-1975. Because this jersey has no year tag on it, nor evidence that one had ever been there, and Haddix was on the coaching staff in 1975, it is a reasonable conclusion that this jersey was originally issued by the Indians in 1975, and that Haddix was reissued the same white jersey to wear again in at least 1976, and possibly even again in 1977 with the sleeve patch removed (though not for certain. These patches are hard to find and it may have been harvested for its collector value.)

Wear and Repairs: The front INDIANS wordmark is original and is burnished and bleached to a shade of dark violet from use, as is the thread holding it in place. The once bright-white fabric has weathered to an ivory shade. There is a 1" long horizontal split on the base of the back number "2", right along the stitching line, surely an artifact of extended use, greater than a single season. There are some small, light dirt-spot stains on the front of the jersey body.

Conclusion: Compared to surviving Indians jerseys of this period, this one is in amazingly good condition, based on the fact that it was issued to a coach and the near certainty that he wore it for at least two, if not three seasons. The jersey in review is in good to very good condition and is without repairs or contrivance. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications, first issued in 1975 and worn in 1976 and possibly 1977 by pitching coach Harvey Haddix of the Cleveland Indians.

Milt Wilcox Cleveland Indians 1974 Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: Jan 21, 2025 Certification Number: 25-0121J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: White double knit pullover Wilson size 42 (marked, measured now as a size 40) Cleveland Indians home jersey in the style worn by the team 1973-1977. 2 1/4" red white and blue knit sleeve end trim, 1" V-neck trim in the same colors. Large "batting Indian" disk patch on the left sleeve as worn 1974-1977. The Cleveland Indians of the 1970s were a frugal organization that wasted nothing. Game used team jerseys from the decade are almost never found in their original configuration in the hobby because nearly all were reissued/ repurposed by the Indians, some several times over, before their service was through. At 6' 2" and 185, it is reasonable that Wilcox would have worn this size 42 jersey, though it was likely a snug fit. As received, the light table reveals that the player number 43 on back is original but the player name had been removed leaving behind glue stains that were visible even without the use of the light table. All lettering on the jersey is a matte finished fabric that is not typical tackle twill, which is common to the Indians of the early 1970s.

In 1974 Milt Wilcox went 2-2 in 40 appearances for the Indians, in all but two as a reliever, compiling a 4.67 ERA and 33 strikeouts in 71–1/3 inning pitched. He was on the Indians 1973-1974, and played for five teams during a 16 year MLB career compiling a career 119-113 record.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson's locker tag correct for the time period, noting the size as 42 is stitched inside the back of the neck. The Indians did not generally team tag their jerseys 1974-1975. There is no year/set tagging on the jersey which is also common from this period. Wilcox played for the Indians 1972-1974, this style of jersey was worn in both 1973-1974 and based on its Wilson tagging I suspect that this jersey was a 1974 issue.

Wear and Repairs: The front INDIANS wordmark is original and is burnished and bleached to a shade of dark Navy/violet from use, as is the thread holding it in place. The once bright-white fabric has weathered to a light ivory shade. There are some very small, light dirt-spot stains on the front of the jersey body. All stitching is tight and intact. This jersey has less wear than most of this style we have evaluated over the years.

Restoration performed: Using the ghosts visible on the back with the black light table and sourcing the Indians player name on back typestyle as used by Wilson, we re-created the original player name on back and so it exactly over the old ghosts. The fabric we used was a vintage style matte cotton twill that closely matched the rest of the lettering on the shirt. It was aged slightly and stitched with slightly off color thread to match.

Above: The jersey as received. At left, the ghosts of the original name on back were easy to see when put under the ultraviolet "black" light.

Conclusion: Compared to surviving Indians jerseys of this period we have evaluated, this one is in better than average "good" condition; it is free of contrivance. Aside from the name on back restoration, is without alteration or repairs. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications, and was worn in 1974 by pitcher Milt Wilcox of the Cleveland Indians.

Letter of Restoration / Professional Opinion

1976 Ray Fosse Cleveland Indians Game Used Red Jersey

Examination Date: August 4, 2020 Certification Number: 200805JH1

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Cleveland Indians red alternate pullover jersey, Wilson tagging, size 46. The Wilson tag is the style used by that company 1974-1977. Navy and white sewn-in V-Neck and sleeve end trim "INDIANS" arched on the front in white outlined by Navy Blue in the stylized rustic font used by the team 1973-1977. Not year tagged and showing signs of relatively heavy use. The trim's white color has been worn to a cream color but the blue survives unbleached. The original swinging Indian disk patch remains on the left sleeve, and the original team crest remains own the front, its lettering puckered and discolored from wash and wear, the attaching thread bleached, yet still complete and tight. There is a 1" by 1/2" over-sewn team repair to a rip in the back of the jersey near the right armpit.

Ray Fosse had been a popular player on the Indians 1967-1972; his first full year with the Indians had been 1970, and that year he was selected as an alternate to the AL All-Star squad, and was involved in the famous collision with Pete Rose at home plate that injured him badly. He was traded to the Oakland Athletics 1973-1975, then was re-signed by the Indians for the 1976 season in December 1975, staying with the team 1976 and before being optioned to the expansion Mariners late in 1977. His career ended in 1979 after being released by the Brewers.

This jersey was presented to me for evaluation and a potential restoration. Its narrative follows.

As Received: The jersey had FOSSE on back in white, and the number 10 below in white outlined with Navy. Even a casual observation revealed that this jersey had been re-lettered at least once. Putting it on the light table revealed at least one prior name on back and multiple number changes. Its owner supplied documentation from when he had purchased it claiming that it had been restored to "FOSSE 10" in an easier restoration and that the restorer claimed that the NOB was sewn directly over the old lettering shadows, while the number was moved 1/2" lower to make it look better as the spacing of the shadows was, in his opinion, too tightly close together. Unfortunately, as is almost always the case, no photographic documentation of the earlier restoration before and in-process was supplied. The jersey is a size 46, not unreasonable for Fosse to have worn, but other examples in our photo library of jerseys he wore both before and after this time are size 44s.

We elected to strip the back of the jersey to do a full evaluation on the light table. Our observations:

Name on back: The as-presented white letters "FOSSE" were not exactly in the correct font as used by the 1975-1977 Indians; too light in stroke and too tall. Their removal showed scant evidence that another FOSSE had been there before, with faint shadow evidence of the proper shorter, fatter font. More clearly evident was the shadow of the player name "PURYEAR", a young pitcher who was invited to spring training in several years (for the first time in 1978) and who wore #61 each year (according to team media guides). Nate Puryear never made the Indians MLB roster. The arch of the ghost FOSSE name on back is steep and erratic, inexact in placement and arch, which is very typical of the the Indians whose 1970s uniforms are (along with with the Rangers) among the most originally-sloppily lettered in the hobby.

Numbers on back: With the back numbers stripped, the light table showed clear evidence of 61 having been there, as well as a 31. The "deepest" and least visible ghost was that of the number 10, placed approximately 1/2" higher than the last restorer had stitched it. The 61 and 31 are in a smaller font— reminiscent of that used by the 1978 Indians. Interesting because the Indians changed to a new jersey design in 1978 but wore this old 1975-1977 style still in 1978 spring training. My hypothesis is that the #61 worn by Puryear in spring training 1978 was set in the new, smaller font used in the regular season by the 1978 Indians, and therefore why it does not match. The ghost of the earlier 10 is placed very high, less than 1/2" from the name on back. The numeral "1" was originally more than 1/4" higher than the "0" next to it. Examination showed the clear ghost of a chevron shaped patch on the right sleeve, the mark of the removed 1976 Bicentennial patch. While 1976 and 1977 Indians jerseys were year tagged, this one is without a year tag. Indians jerseys were not year tagged in 1975. Given the team's frugality, it is very reasonable that the lack of a 1976 year tag is because this jersey was left over from 1975. It is not at all clear how much of the jersey's wear is from Fosse's 1976 use or its subsequent re-issue in Spring training and possibly the minor leagues. The fact that it retains its original front cresting is a fortunate happening, as these jerseys were often stripped of their front wordmark once their MLB service was through.

Restoration performed: The light table images were overlaid with the patterns from the Indians 1976 template, and these matched the ghosts perfectly in size and shape. An original 1976 Cleveland bicentennial patch was secured and returned to its place on the left sleeve. New name and number lettering was cut from tackle twill, then it was distressed/aged, both with media blasting and organic dyeing, then stitched with bleached thread to make them better match the patina of age and use acquired by the front wordmark. Using the light table, the replacement lettering was stitched in place over the old ghosts. The numbers are misaligned and off-center as they were originally; the name on back is sewn over the original ghosts in the same imprecise arc as original. The ghosts that are partly visible around the name on back letters are from the incorrect font used in this jersey's earlier, less precise restoration.

Top: The jersey as received. NOB in incorrect font, numbers inexact to original and with modified placement, missing sleeve patch. A light table enhancement of one of the letters shows the incorrectly restored letter with a white outline, the original faint shadow of the Indians 1976 font in black, and the ghost of and "E" from the last-applied, Spring training name. Bottom left, the ghost of the sleeve patch before its reapplication, right, the name "Puryear" clearly visible beneath the incorrect FOSSE NOB on the jersey as received.

Conclusion: This jersey has had a long life of utility, My evaluation concludes that it likely began as a 1975 Indians team jersey that was likely unused in 1975 and was first issued to Ray Fosse in 1976. It exhibits a great deal of wear typical of Indians jerseys of the period, which were almost always used in multiple years. After Fosse's use it was likely relegated to spring training and possibly the minor league system. It is in surprisingly good condition, and is free of contrivance. It has been professionally researched and restored, all documented here.

1976 Frank Robinson Cleveland Indians Game Worn Alternate Uniform

Examination Date: September 24, 2019 Certification Number: 190924C4

This letter will serve as the opinion of Sports Investors Authentication LLC regarding the item in review.

Description: Presented is a 1976 Cleveland Indians Frank Robinson uniform. Size 42 Indians red pullover jersey and 35" waist uniform pants of Frank Robinson, who in 1975 became the first black manager in Major League Baseball, as well as played his final season as ball payer. From 1975-1977, the Indians had three sets of tops and pants. Red, white, and blue, and they would "mix and match" them at both home and on the road. "INDIANS" arched across the front in tall blocky white outlined with navy stylized letters that were used by the team from 1973-1977. 1 3/4" knit sleeve ends in navy and white and 1" similarly colored v-neck trim is sewn in. Robinson's name is on the back in white, in the correct font for the the 1976 Indians, with his number "20" below in white outlined in navy. The Indians team sleeve patch for 1976 is sewn to the left sleeve, a 4 1/4" white twill disk embroidered with red stitches like a baseball, and featuring a navy and white Chief Wahoo in full body swinging an oversized bat. On the right sleeve is a shield patch in red, white and blue with a Cleveland skyline/USA Bicentennial logo and the words "Cleveland Spirit of '76 Sports". This patch was also worn that year by the other Cleveland professional sports teams. This patch is rarely seen and the one on this jersey is original. The pants had a wide navy/white/navy elastic waistband, a drawstring, two snaps, and a zipper at the closure. 1 3/4" wide white/navy/white knit trim runs the length of the leg on the outside seam of both pants legs. Notably, Robinson usually wore a size 44 jersey, but it is not uncommon to see team issues one size larger or smaller

Photo Match/Provenance: We have found copies of the original bill of sale and team-issued certificate of authenticity for both jersey and pants from the Cleveland Indians to its first purchaser, dated May 1, 1979. Noting all the specifics of this named set.

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: The correct style for 1976 Wilson manufacturer label is sewn in the back of the neck, showing the size, 42. A small approximately 1" square of white knit fabric is sewn to the outer front left tail with the simple designation "76" hand-chain stitched to it in the Wilson factory stitcher's familiar hand. The pants have a similar strip tag, "20 35 26 76" (player 20, 35" waist, 26" inseam, 1976) The Wilson manufacturer tag has the size "35" hand chain stitched into it— something we have seen before when a player wears an in-between size of tailored pants.The pants have a "29" written inside in marker which indicates they may have been reissued to another player.

Wear & Repairs: The set shows good use, with evidence of wash and wear, given that Robinson was a player/manager and there were issued at least two sets of three colors of uniforms to all players that year. A light table examination shows that all elements are original and unaltered. All stitching is tight. The pants show slightly more wear than the jersey, perhaps because they may have been reissued to another player later.

Conclusion: The complete uniform in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear, and all elements appear original. Therefore, it is the considered opinion of Sports Investors Authentication that this jersey is genuine and was issued to and was worn by Frank Robinson of the Cleveland Indians in the 1976 season.

Cleveland Indians Mid-1970s Red LOWENSTEIN #30 Jersey

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of an alteration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: (at bottom) Cleveland Indians 1975-1977 style red jersey of #30 John Lowenstein. The number and name on back were coming off due to the failure of the stitching which was half gone, A decision as made to conserve the original player name and number instead of replacing them with new. The lettering had been originally attached rather sloppily with an imperfect name arch and very large, wide, stitching

Work Performed: All remaining thread was carefully removed, the curled and detached edges of the lettering was tacked down directly over the original shadows and all was re-sewn with color-matched and bleached thread for a better match to the original twill lettering.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Eric Raich Cleveland Indians 1975-1976 Blue Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: November 30, 2021 Certification Number: 21-1129J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Navy Blue pullover Wilson-made size 46 Cleveland Indians jersey of pitcher Eric Raich. Wide red/white/red sewn-in knit striped sleeve ends and similarly colored 1" V-Neck on a solid blue body. "INDIANS" arched on the front in the rustic 1973-1977 team font in white over red tackle twill. Large, original 'swinging Indian' disk patch on the left sleeve, and the 1976 "Spirit of 1976 Cleveland Sports" chevron shaped patch sewn to the right sleeve.

Restoration Performed: On back, the player number 33 in white over red and the name on back "Raich" has been professionally restored. As received, the jersey had a non-team-spec style player number and name on back (it had been lettered as "Raich 33"). At the request of the jersey owner, I removed these to see what was beneath and might be visible on the light table. It showed evidence of three different sets of numbers having been on the back, likely 33— two separate times— and then either 30, 33, 36 or 38. There was scant shadow evidence of another name having once been sewn on back (seven letters, starting with an S and ending with an R). The replacement "RAICH" name on back in incorrect style had been sewn roughly over the old original outlines of that name. The "33" on back was not the proper font for the 1975 Indians, but had been sewn approximately over the old ghosts.

In typical Indians 1970s fashion, the original name on back arch is crudely executed with uneven letter spacing. The numbers beneath are positioned slightly off center of the name. The ghost evidence revealed that one of the earlier incarnations of numbers on back had been even more egregiously off center, with the second digit positioned more than an inch further to the right.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson manufacturer tag in the back of the neck in the correct style for 1975, showing the size as 46, appropriate for the player. There is no team tagging on this jersey, or evidence that any ever had been there. This style jersey was worn 1975-1977; jerseys issued in 1975 had no team tagging, and Raich #33 was a member of the 1975 Indians squad. The 1976 sleeve patch is an old, original example (not a reproduction) and it was very common for the Indians to reissue player jerseys for MLB use in a second year. Raich was also on the 1976 squad; this could have been his backup jersey. Jerseys newly issued for the 1976 season had team tagging on the tail, which as we have established , this one lacks.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey is in generally good condition, in that its body is only mildly but evenly faded, has no rips or holes, the neck and sleeve trim is intact, and the original front team crest is present, as are original style team sleeve patches that do not appear to have been replaced. Cleaning the fabric for restoration, I removed a lot of old glue lines from the back where previous numbers had been stitched. The twill lettering of the front "INDIANS" wordmark shows burnishing and staining typical of having been worn and washed many dozens of times. The white twill lettering and its attaching stitching has been stained to a pale beige. In restoring the back lettering, I carefully matched my 1975 Indians number and alpha name fonts to what I determined to be the original set of ghost lines on the fabric, media blasted and organically dyed the twill to approximate the same wear and use as the front lettering to create harmony, and stitched them in place with mildly bleached thread to match original.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in good, professionally restored condition: the front is all original, and the back is properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by pitcher Eric Raich of the of the 1975-1976 Cleveland Indians.

At left: The jersey as received , before restoration. Below left, with back lettering removed on the light table showing ghosting from multiple sets of old numbers and names. Below right, shows new back numbers cut before being media blasted and dyed to match the original front lettering.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Miguel Dilone #27 Game Worn 1980 Cleveland Indians Home Jersey

Examination Date: December 12, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1212J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1980-tagged Rawlings-made size 40 Cleveland Indians pullover jersey. "INDIANS" vertically arched across the front in single-color Navy twill lettering. 2 1/2" wide elastic red-white-Navy Blue sleeve end trim, also in a 1" style trimming the V-neck. The Indians Chief wahoo patch is stitched to the left sleeve, and a smaller patch is sewn to the right sleeve, "Press Star" As received, the jersey was without a name on back and with a very well worn #27 on the back, sewn off center and at a comically crooked angle. There was an autograph on back, (Cory Snyder '85) above the numbers.

In 1980, two Indians players wore #27, Dilone and Andreas Mora. A light table evaluation revealed the very faint ghosts of the name "DILONE". Mora was with the Indians from opening day through May 6, and Dilone joined the team and played his first game on May 9. Both men were roughly the same size. Given the Indians' history of re-using everything and wasting nothing, it is reasonable (and highly likely) that this jersey was first issued to Mora and then immediately reissued to Dilone. Given the heavy wear to the jersey after its lifetime of extreme use, no obvious signs of Mora's name on back remain.

Listed at 6' tall and 160 lbs, Dilone would have likely fit into this size 40 jersey. He was a member of the Indians 1980-1983. In 1980 he had unquestionably the best year of his career, appearing in 132 games hitting .341 with 9 home runs. His .341 mark was third in the league in 1980. (Baseball Almanac, SABR) During 1980 the Cleveland Press ran a promotion where readers could vote for the "Press Star of the Week". Weekly winners would accrue "Press Star" patches for the weeks that they won. While I do not have records of who won these patches, given Dilone's standout season, it is unsurprising that he earned one. The patches were printed with some sort of fabric ink onto a white twill backing. Washing has faded it significantly; they were not made to last! In a twelve year career, Dilone played mostly as a backup for seven teams.

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDreamShop

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The red Rawlings "The Mark of a Pro" tag correct for 1980 is stitched inside the back of the collar. Pinch-sewn under its right edge is a flag tab, SET 1 1980. This tagging is correct for the 1980 Indians and it matches exemplars.

Restoration Performed: As received, this jersey exhibited extreme wear, and was filthy with significant spot-staining on both back and front. The light table revealed that the poorly positioned back numbers were the original ones in their original spots. The front INDIANS wordmark is surprisingly unfaded and is attached tightly with the original thread. The back lettering is worn and burnished from excessive wear. The original thread holding the back numbers in place was bleached to white and most was missing, and a second (and possibly third) set of blue stitching had been added at a later date to keep them from falling off. There was a slice in the fabric on the back a the neck, and a hole half the size of a dime below at the edges of one other removed letters for the player name on back. Amazingly, the Press Star patch remained on the right sleeve. Most likely this jersey lived on in spring training and the minor leagues for years after its 1980 MLB issue.

The owner of the jersey asked me to restore it, and we elected to reuse the original back numbers, recreating the player name on back using the ghosts as our guide. The jersey was so badly stained that we took the unusual step of removing the back numbers and both the sleeve patches so that the jersey body could be properly cleaned. Had these been left in place damage to them would have surely resulted. The jersey was aggressively washed, the stains addressed, and the autograph on back removed. Spot-application and a misted spray of diluted bleach helped whiten the stained fabric.

The light table assisted in the recreation of the original player name on back, which was cut from a cotton-blend twill as used by the Indians in the 1960s and 1970s. The name lettering was bleached to approximate the purplish shade of the original numbers, and then all were stitched in place over the original ghosts using eggplant-colored thread to recreate the look of age and wear. Notably, the hole in the back of the jersey is at the top of the removed letter "L" in Dilone's name. The sleeve patches were returned to their original locations. Holes were darned closed.

On this page: The restoration process: At top, the light table image of the faint ghost of the player name on back. The dark dots on the negative image are tiny holes where the edges of the original letters were attached. Using the Indians stock font from 1980, the original name aligned with many of these holes. Below, the staining from the beginning of the removal of the autograph, the sleeve patch and the original numbers on back. Aggressive cleaning helped whiten the fabric and remove the staining At bottom left, the newly-bleached twill lettering being applied with a template to cover the ghosts.

Conclusion: In my opinion, this is the 1980 home jersey of Indians outfielder Miguel Dilone from his standout 1980 season.This jersey is in fair overall condition. A light table evaluation shows that it lacks contrivance It has been expertly restored to its original configuration and appearance.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Bobby Bonds 1984 Cleveland Indians Road Game Jersey, Coach

Examination Date: September 29, 2022 Certification Number: 22-0929J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Rawlings-made navy blue size 44 (measured as 42, due to shrinkage) pullover Cleveland Indians road jersey, issued to hitting coach Bobby Bonds. Solid Navy body with wide knit 2.5" sleeve end trim and 1" V-Neck trim in red/white/red. "INDIANS" vertically arched across the front in white over red. Player numbers 25 on back in the same white over red, "BONDS" name on back directly sewn above in white. Chief Wahoo patch is sewn to the left sleeve. All match exemplars for the 1984 Indians. Bonds was a coach on that team. After 14 seasons as a player with the San Francisco Giants 1968-1974, then three with the Yankees, Bonds bounced around towards the end of his long career, playing for eight teams in eight years. He played for the Indians in 1979 only. He retired after the 1981 season. The Indians announced Bonds as a hitting instructor coach on February 8, 1984, and given that Spring Training was just about to start, perhaps unsurprisingly this jersey appears as though it was sewn in the clubhouse rather than at Rawlings. A light table examination shows that the name and number on this one are original and unchanged, yet the numbers are crooked and carelessly sewn on with a wide and inexact stitch, The name on back is notably clocked off-center to the right, typical of less-than-careful work done in the Indians clubhouse.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings red tag appropriate for 1984 is stitched inside the back of the neck, with the size "44" embroidered integral to it. A white flag tab is pinched under the right side of the tag, on which is printed SET 1 1984. All match exemplars for the 1984 Indians.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows at least a full season of use. When received for evaluation, the name on back was covered by a plan blue nameplate, typical practice for when the Indians reissued jerseys to be worn by another player in either spring training or in the minor leagues. I removed the nameplate and washed the jersey. The detached nameplate accompanied the jersey. Notably, the bottoms of both knit sleeve ends have been cut open to give more room for movement. We do not know whether or not Bonds or a later owner did this. All twill lettering is burnished and faded with some staining and with significant puckering from hot water washing. Because of the wide stitching used to sew on the back numbers, there is some fraying of the edges of the back numbers, and part of the 5 has come detached from the jersey along its vertical center stroke.

Conclusion: After a thorough examination, I am satisfied that this jersey is original and uncontrived, that it was team-issue by the Indians and worn by Bobby Bonds as a coach in 1984, then likely recycled for later use in either the minor leagues or subsequent years' spring training by the team.

Letter of Professional Opinion

1976 Williamsport Tomahawks/Tom Buskey 1974 Cleveland Indians Road Jersey

Examination Date: February 13, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0213J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: The Williamsport Tomahawks were the Class AA Eastern League affiliate of the Cleveland Indians in Williamsport, Pennsylvania during the 1976 season. This jersey started life as a Rawlings size 44 1974 Cleveland Indians road jersey issued to #35 RHP Tom Buskey. This size would have been a tight fit for the 6' 3" 220 lb. player, but snug garments were the style then. As examined, it has the colorful blue-embroidered on red twill "Tomahawks" wordmark with underline. The wordmark is cut from a single piece of red tackle twill, its details embroidered in dark blue thread, and then it is attached to the jersey with a tight blue satin stitch that serves as its outline. The Indians 1974 disk patch remains on the left sleeve. On back, the number 35 appears to have been been removed and replaced at some point as evidence of a different placement and different shaped "5" is evident on the light table. There is no name on back, but the clear ghost outline of "BUSKEY" is arched above in the font used by the 1974 Indians. On front, the light table reveals the former presence of the arched stylized lettered INDIANS wordmark used by the team that year.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings size 44 red tag appropriate for 1974 is stitched inside the back of the neck. Pinched beneath it and to its right side is a white flag tab that reads SET 1 8P 1974, referencing its use with the MLB Indians, not the minor league Tomahawks.

Wear & Repairs: Collectors bemoan the near total lack of Indians MLB jerseys from this period available in the hobby, and this jersey provides a good example of what happened to them. As the Tomahawks were a one-year team, existing only in 1976, and the Indians were known to regularly reuse jerseys for more than a single season, it is reasonable to assume that Buskey wore this same jersey in both 1974-1975 before it was sent to the minors. Typical of Indians jersey of this vintage, it is so bleached that it hovers in shade somewhere between white and gray. My experience tells me that this color jersey started life as a road gray one. The tight stitching of the wordmark coupled with subsequent hot water washing has caused it to shrink and pucker There are a half-dozen team repairs of rips in the player name area, closing up holes that were made by the careless removal of the name on back and player numbers. Many other small holes are left, un-repaired, that had been at the corners of the original front and back letters. The existing numbers are burnished and devoid of sheen, detergent-faded to an indigo purple and are attached with the uneven and careless stitching typical of minor league work. Even though the numbers are small and used with no player name on back, the numbers are a distant ten inches from the collar.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in fair condition and clearly game worn, is properly lettered, shows clear evidence of its heritage as a 1974 MLB Cleveland Indians jersey. It has a team-issue style tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications for and worn by Tom Buskey of the 1974 Cleveland Indians.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Letter of Restoration

Glenallen Hill 1992 Cleveland Indians Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: November 4, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1104J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description, as received: Cleveland Indians white six-button home jersey, #33. White body with thick 1 5/8" Red/white/Navy sewn-in "racing stripes" on the sleeve tops and down the sides. INDIANS team crest is arched on the front in Navy over red layered twill. The player number 33 was sewn directly below on the left side of the chest in a font that is not correct for the MLB Indians. On back, the player number is repeated and there was no nameplate/player name sewn above. Consistent with other Indians jersey of 1992, the ghost of the nameplate very long, un-trimmed as is typical to make it close in size to the ends of player name. The jersey is a size 50 with one inch extra length tagging. When put on the light table, the ghost of the player number "1" is visible on both front and back beneath the numbers 33. Uncommonly, when held at an angle to the light, the slight embossed impression in the fabric of the name HILL is slightly visible.

Outfielder Glenallen Hill was #1 on the 1992 Indians. At 6' 3" and 230 lbs, this jersey is reasonably sized for him. While few exemplars exist in our library of this player's jerseys, we found a jersey that is attributed to him as a coach after his playing career ended that was a size 52. As was typical, the Indians recycled their MLB jerseys to the minors after their use in MLB was complete, generally right after spring training of the year follow the date of issue. The Indians had seven MiLB clubs in 1993, five of which were named "Indians". Used MLB Jerseys were generally stripped immediately of their nameplates, and sometimes their numbers as well. Minor league teams generally did not use player names on back. It appears that this jersey was being prepared for another player, as the numbers 33 were sewn on, yet I would judge that it was not used in this configuration because if it had been washed even once with its original nameplate removed, the ghost impressions of the name "HILL" would have instantly disappeared. While sometimes instead of removing the original nameplate, a blank coverup plate is sewn on top. I do not believe that was the case here, as there is no evidence of a cover-up blank nameplate having been sewn on.

In 1992 Glenallen Hill appeared in 102 games for the Indians, mostly in left field but he played in all three outfield positions that year. He hit .241 with 18 home runs. In a 13 year MLB career he played for seven teams.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Diamond Collection locker tag is sewn to the outer left front tail, in the correct style for 1992-1993, showing size 50. A 1" x 3" piece of white knit jersey fabric is pinch sewn under the bottom left of the Russell tag, and is stitched on all four sides, It bears the two-digit designation "92" printed in black plastisol style ink, matching exemplars. While this is a first-year Russell jersey, and uses the early Diamond Collection tagging correct for 1992, it is made of standard fabric and not the short-lived Intra fabric that was used commonly but not exclusively in 1992-1993. Instead it has a small "100% Polyester" fabric tag pinch-sewn under the tail tag. Beneath that is a flag tag that says "1" Extra Length". To its left is another small fabric tag, frayed and worn from washing on which likely something had been printed but is now wiped clean. The Russell R in Navy/Red is direct-embroidered on the right sleeve and is placed offset towards the front on the end of the sleeve. As is correct with team issue, there is no size tag flag in the back of the neck.

Wear & Repairs; Restoration Performed: The jersey shows appropriate use and is very clean overall. When the replacement numbers "33" were removed they left minor staining which was cleaned. The ghosts of the original numbers "1" match the team template for 1992, and new numbers and player name were cut from the team template. Seeking originality, the odd extra-long nameplate was recreated and sewn in place.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly sized, tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine as worn by Glenallen Hill of the Cleveland Indians from the 1992 season.

Kenny Lofton "Rookie" 1992 Cleveland Indians Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: December 15, 2022 Certification Number: 22-1215J04

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Cleveland Indians white six-button home jersey, #7 Kenny Lofton. White body with thick 1 5/8" Red/white/Navy sewn-in "racing stripes" on the sleeve tops and down the sides. INDIANS team crest is arched on the front in Navy over red layered twill. The player number 7 is sewn directly below on the left side of the chest. On back, the player number is reported with the name above, on a nameplate, in Navy over red. Consistent with other Indians jersey of 1992, the nameplate is one of standard length (not trimmed close to the ends of the player name) and the edges are not serged, it is sewn zig zagged onto the jersey on its raw edge. The jersey is a size 44, is reasonable for Lofton's first year, though he quickly moved to size 46 and then 48 over the next few years. The back number is autographed in silver Sharpie with the player's name and followed by the inscription "Game Used".

While Kenny Lofton had appeared in 20 games for the 1991 Astros with 74 at bats, 1992 is officially considered his rookie season, where he played in 148 games for the Indians, batting .285 with 5 home runs.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Diamond Collection locker tag is sewn to the outer left front tail, in the correct style for 1992-1993, showing size 44. A 1" x 2" piece of white knit jersey fabric is pinch sewn under the bottom left of the Russell tag, and is stitched on all four sides, It bears the two-digit designation "92" printed in black plastisol style ink, matching exemplars. This is a first-year Russell jersey, and as such it is made of the short-lived Intera Fabric, used only in 92-93. There is a small Intera fabric flag tag sewn in the back of the neck. The Russell R in Navy/Red is sewn offset towards the front on the end of the right sleeve. As is correct with team issue, there is no size tag flag in the back of the neck.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows light use and is very clean, and I would judge that this was not Lofton's primary jersey in 1992, and players were issued multiple sets. A light table evaluation shows that it has no alterations or lettering changes.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly sized, tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine to Kenny Lofton of the Cleveland Indians from the 1992 season.

Roberto Alomar 2001 Cleveland Indians Game Worn Blue Home Alternate Jersey

Examination Date: January 21, 2021 Certification Number: 2100201J11

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2001 Cleveland Indians Roberto Alomar Russell six-button size 46 with special tailoring, full-weight navy blue knit jersey. "Indians" scripted with underline in red, navy and white twill diagonally across the front. White 1/8" knit soutache trim on the placket and 1" from the sleeve ends. A white bordered Chief Wahoo mascot logo patch is sewn to the left sleeve, and the 2001 100 Seasons of the American League/Charter Member patch is sewn to the right sleeve. On back, player number "12" in the proper block font in red outlined with white. Name on back above, radially arched and in the correct team font and sewn on a matching knit nameplate with a single-needle serged edge, and in the same colors. The back number is 9" from the collar: these characteristics match other year-2000 Indians jerseys in our reference archive. The lettering matches our templates in terms of style, colors, placement and outline-widths. The back is signed by Alomar in silver ink between the name and number. (I have no opinion on the signature). The post-9/11 applied USA flag is sewn on the center of the back of the neck covering the Silhouetted Batter patch. The Lou Boudreau memorial #5 is direct embroidered in white near the end of the left sleeve. This memorial was added to game jerseys after August 10.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Authentic Collection locker tag is sewn on the outer, lower left shirt tail. The manufacturer tag style is correct for 2001-2003. There is no Russell size flag tag in the neck as is correct with team issues. Beneath the locker tag is sewn a rectangular mylar-fabric patch with "2001" printed on it in black ink. Pinched under the left bottom side of the locker tag are a set of two progressively longer white flag tabs; 100% Polyester 46, 2" Extra Sleeve Length. The Russell R logo is embroidered in white into the end of the left sleeve. The jersey does in fact exhibit this special tailoring. All of these observations match other examples in our archives.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering and stitching on the jersey is unaltered. The jersey itself is in very good, bright, unfaded condition. Its most obvious sign of use is the fraying/fading/curling of the tags, and some minor puckering between the layers of the twill lettering. There is some graying of the white twill elements and some fraying of the edges of the lettering indicating many washings. There are no signs of any repairs.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and worn by Roberto Alomar of the Cleveland Indians in the 2001 season.

Manny Ramirez 1999 Cleveland Indians Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: October 6, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1006J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1999 Cleveland Indians Manny Ramirez #24 Russell white six-button size 50 (marked and measured) full-weight jersey with additional special tailoring. "Indians" scripted with underline in red and navy twill diagonally across the front. Red 1/8" knit trim on the placket and 1" from the sleeve ends. A white bordered Chief Wahoo mascot logo patch is sewn to the left sleeve, and the 1999-only "A.L. Central Champs" patch is sewn to the right sleeve. On back, player number "24" in the proper block font in red outlined with white. Name on back above, radially arched and in the correct unique slightly narrow team font and sewn on a matching knit nameplate with a single-needle serged edge, and in the same colors. The back number is approximately 9" from the collar: these characteristics match other 1999 Indians jerseys in our reference archive. The lettering exactly matches our templates in terms of style, colors, placement and outline-widths. The back is signed by Ramirez adding his number, 24, in black Sharpie between the numbers. (I have no professional opinion on the signature, but the jersey is accompanied by a PSA certificate authenticating the signature).

During 1999, Ramirez had a stellar season, appearing in 147 games for the Indians, hitting .333 with 44 home runs. In 1999, Ramirez set the Indians' single-season RBIs record with 165 RBIs. Ramirez enjoyed a 19 year MLB career, playing for the Indians for his first eight years, the Red Sox for eight season, then his final five years with the Dodgers, White Sox and Rays. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Provenance: The jersey is accompanied by a letter signed (un-notarized) dated 10-7-2005 by a Mr. Art Morley saying that this jersey was sourced through Ted Walsh, Indians Clubhouse manager. As an authenticator, such a letter is interesting, but because it is neither signed and notarized by Ramirez nor the Indians, so it has little value as provenance. This jersey's vintage pre-dates any sort of formalized MLB authentication process.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Authentic Collection locker tag is sewn on the outer, lower left shirt tail. The manufacturer tag style is correct for 1995-1999. There is no Russell size flag tag in the neck as is correct with team issues. Beneath the locker tag is pinch-sewn a layered series of progressively longer white flag tabs. They are, in order, 100% Polyester, +2" armhole opening, +2" sleeve end, and 2" Extra Sleeve Length (redundant). The Russell R logo is embroidered in red and dark blue into the end of the left sleeve below the AL Central Champs patch. Notably— the jersey does in fact exhibit all this special tailoring. All of these observations match other examples in our archives; this was Ramirez's preferred size and tailoring.The fact that this jersey is an odd-in between size has a player's multiple special tailoring tags on it AND all these tailoring items are actually present on a jersey, it is a fair conclusion that the jersey was in fact prepared for the named player. Often. I will observe when jerseys are advertised as "team issued" for a famous player, they may include the special tailoring tags but often the custom alterations are not present.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering and stitching on the jersey is unaltered. The jersey itself is in very good, bright, unfaded condition. Its most obvious sign of use is come curling of the tags, indicating it has been washed multiple times.There are no signs of any repairs. I would judge this to have light use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly sized, tagged, specially tailored and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine, as issued to Manny Ramirez of the Cleveland Indians from the 1999 season.

A Note Regarding the PSA Certification of This Jersey

When I received this jersey to be authenticated, I photographed it as a part of my normal intake process. Those photos clearly show the presence of the PSA authentication sticker on the front tail jock tag, serialized AK47598. This tag accompanies a certificate from PSA validating the autograph on the back. See the photo below.

At some point while in my possession, this tag fell off the jersey and disappeared. This seldom happens; these tags are tamper resistant so that once removed they break into small pieces and can not be reapplied. I was unable to find the lost tag.

I certify that I personally observed the tag on this jersey, and will attest that it was present and was uncontrived in its application before it was lost.

Roberto Alomar 2000 Cleveland Indians Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: April 3, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0403J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2000 Cleveland Indians Roberto Alomar Russell six-button size 46 with 2" extra sleeve length tailoring (marked and measured) full-weight gray knit jersey. "Cleveland" scripted with underline in red, navy and white twill diagonally across the front. Navy 1/8" knit trim on the placket and 1" from the sleeve ends. A white bordered Chief Wahoo mascot logo patch is sewn to the left sleeve. On back, player number "12" in the proper block font in red outlined with Navy Blue. Name on back above, radially arched and in the correct team font and sewn on a matching, slightly puckered and unbacked knit nameplate with a single-needle serged edge, and in the same colors. The back number is 9" from the collar: these characteristics match other year-2000 Indians jerseys in our reference archive. The lettering matches our templates in terms of style, colors, placement and outline-widths. The MLB Silhouetted Batter patch is sewn to the center of the back of the collar, its first year of use. The jersey size and tailoring is appropriate for Alomar.

In 2000 with the Indians, Alomar appeared in 155 games and batted .310 with 19 home runs. He enjoyed a 17 year career in MLB, playing for seven different teams. During his career, the 12-time All-Star won more Gold Glove Awards (10) than any other second baseman in baseball history, in addition to winning four Silver Slugger Awards for his hitting.[4] Among second basemen, he ranks third in games played (2,320), fifth in stolen bases (474), sixth in plate appearances (10,400), seventh in doubles (504) and assists (6,524), and eighth in hits (2,724), runs (1,508), at-bats (9,073), and double plays turned (1,407). In 2011, Alomar was inducted into the National Baseball Hall of Fame (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Provenance: The jersey is accompanied by a letter from Indians Charities dated July 9, 2003 certifying its authenticity. While it is likely legitimate, I need to note that there is no cross-referenced serialization that associates this particular jersey with this letter.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Authentic Collection locker tag is sewn on the outer, lower left shirt tail. The manufacturer tag style is correct for 2000. There is no Russell size flag tag in the neck as is correct with team issues. Beneath the locker tag is sewn a rectangular mylar-fabric patch with "2000" printed on it in black ink. Pinched under the left bottom side of the locker tag is a white flag tab; "46 100% Polyester", and a second layered longer tag, '2" extra sleeve length'. The Russell R logo is embroidered in Navy and red into the end of the left sleeve. All of these observations match other examples in our archives.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering and stitching on the jersey is unaltered. The jersey itself is in very good, bright, unfaded condition. Its most obvious sign of use is the fraying/fading/curling of the tags, and some minor puckering between the layers of the twill lettering and some loose threads on the sewn edges of the lettering. There are no signs of any repairs.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, tailored and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and worn by Roberto Alomar of the 2000 Cleveland Indians.

Kenny Lofton 1998 Cleveland Indians Game Worn Road Jersey

Examination Date: April 2, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0402J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Cleveland Indians road gray jersey made by Russell, size 46 (marked and measured) with 6-button front. 1/8" Navy knit trim bands the sleeve ends and borders the placket. "Cleveland" scripted with underline at an angle on front, in layered twill, red over Navy over white. Player number 7 on the back in red over navy, player name LOFTON on single-needle serged edge nameplate in the same colors using the Indians condensed block font. 1998 All Star Game patch is sewn to the right sleeve, and the white-bordered Chief Wahoo patch is sewn on the left sleeve. Lofton was elected to the 1998 All-Star team, an event in which American League road jerseys were worn, though this authentication does not attest that this jersey was worn in that event. The jersey is boldly autographed on the front left side. I have no professional opinion on the autograph. A Beckett letter of authenticity of provided certifying the autograph. Surveying exemplars, Lofton wore size 46 jerseys at this stage of his career.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows use, and while it is free of damage or repairs, the jersey fabric is softened and the sewn lettering and tagging is softened and slightly burnished from wear and washing. A light table evaluation shows that all sewn elements are original and free of tampering. The nameplate displays puckering as it is sewn, typical of of unbacked nameplates.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition. The jersey has no contrivances of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Kenny Lofton of the 1998 Cleveland Indians.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Jack Morris Final Season Cleveland Indians Game Worn 1994 Home Jersey

Examination Date: October 26, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1026J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Cleveland Indians road gray jersey made by Russell, size 50 (marked and measured) with 6-button front. 1/8" Navy knit trim bands the sleeve ends and borders the placket. "Cleveland" scripted with underline at an angle on front, in layered twill, red over Navy over white. Player number 47 on the back in red over navy, player name MORRIS on nameplate in the same colors using the Indians condensed block font. 1994-only MLB 125th Anniversary patch is sewn on the right sleeve, and the white-bordered Chief Wahoo patch is sewn on the left sleeve.

Morris played on the Indians in 1994 only, a season that turned out to be the final one in his Hall of Fame career. That year he started 23 games and went 10-6 with a 5.60 ERA. He was released by the Indians on August 9, 1994 anticipating the MLB strike that year, and did not play in the majors again. During his 18 year career, prior he had played for the Tigers, Twins and Blue Jays. Morris was a five-time All-Star (1981, 1984, 1985, 1987, and 1991), and played on four World Series Championship teams (1984 Tigers, 1991 Minnesota Twins, and 1992–1993 Toronto Blue Jays). He went 3–0 in the 1984 postseason with two complete-game victories in the 1984 World Series, and 4–0 in the 1991 postseason with a ten-inning complete-game victory in Game 7 of the 1991 World Series. Morris won the Babe Ruth Award in both 1984 and 1991, and was named World Series MVP in 1991. While he gave up the most hits, most earned runs, and most home runs of any pitcher in the 1980s, he also started the most games, pitched the most innings, and had the most wins of any pitcher in that decade. He is one of eight players in MLB history to have won back-to-back World Series championships on different teams. He was elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame in 2017. (Wikipedia, Baseball Almanac)

Restoration Performed: As received for examination, this jersey wore a "ROA" nameplate and showed the scar of the removed 1994 sleeve patch. A light table examination shows that the numbers are original. Even though the ROA name is very short, it was stitched on a very long nameplate that had the ends simply tucked underneath and zig-zagged over the top. This is easily explained.

Continued, overleaf

William F. Henderson
Major League Baseball Authentications / Author, The Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys
bill@TheDream.Shop

Joe Roa was a September 1995 call-up for the Indians. In his first-ever MLB appearance, he pitched for the Indians on September 20, 1995, his only appearance that year, and the start of a six-year MLB career. As was commonly the case with a call-up, a uniform had to be quickly be prepared for him, and the Indians were in the middle of a road trip when Roa first pitched. Most likely this pre-used jersey was kept with others of assorted sizes by the equipment manager carried along as emergency "extras" for just such a need, and a nameplate was quickly made for it without trimming or serging the edge; the sleeve patch from 1994 removed.

When I removed the nameplate, on the light table, the ghost of the former 1994 nameplate was clearly visible, one that was the right size and position for the name "MORRIS". Using a pair of same-vintage Indians road pants, I made a new correctly serged-edge nameplate using the ghost for my pattern, and stitched the name to it using the correct Indians 1994 player name font. I photographed the spot on the sleeve to document where the 1994 patch had been, then sewed a vintage replacement of that patch directly over the shadow.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows an honest season of typical use by an AL pitcher, and while it is free of damage or repairs, the sewn lettering and tagging is softened and slightly puckered from wear and washing. The removal and replacement of the nameplate and the removal of the 1994 sleeve patch have been mentioned. All stages of the restoration have been documented here.

Above, color-inverted negative image clearly shows the outline of the removed MLB 125th patch on the right sleeve before it was replaced. Note that originally it was sewn slightly crooked, restoration is placed exactly over the ghost. Above right shows the hastily-made nameplate with its ends tucked under instead of trimmed and serged; below right light table images shows the two ghosts: the pink line is from the original Morris nameplate, the longer yellow one is from the replacement Roa one.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in excellent condition: the front is all original, and the right sleeve patch and nameplate on back are properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no contrivances of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by pitcher Jack Morris of the 1994 Cleveland Indians.

Letter of Professional Opinion

C.C. Sabathia 2002 Cleveland Indians Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: December 15, 2022 Certification Number: 22-1215J03

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2002 Cleveland Indians C.C. Sabathia #52 Russell white six-button size 56 (marked and measured) full-weight jersey with additional special tailoring. "Indians" scripted with underline in red, sparkle silver and Navy twill diagonally across the front. Navy 3/16" knit soutache trim on the placket and Navy/gray/Navy 1/2 1" from the sleeve ends. A Navy bordered Chief Wahoo mascot logo patch with a secondary sparkle silver outline is sewn to the left sleeve. On back, player number "52" in the proper block font in red outlined with sparkle silver outlined with Navy. Name on back above, radially arched and in the correct team font and in the same colors but with the blue outline drop-shadowed, as was the team style that year, and sewn on a very close but not-exactly matching knit nameplate with a non-serged edge, the plate zig-zag stitched directly to the shirt, MLB Silhouetted batter patch on the back of the neck in red, white and Navy Blue. These characteristics match other year-2002 Indians jerseys in our reference archive. The lettering matches our templates in terms of style, colors, placement and outline-widths. A survey of jerseys worn by Sabathia show that 56 is his preferred size, and all have both extended tails and sleeves, though in differing amounts. The lack of a serged edge on the nameplate is not typical, but is acceptable.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Authentic Collection locker tag is sewn on the outer, lower left shirt tail. The manufacturer tag style is correct for 2001-2003. There is no Russell size flag tag in the neck as is correct with team issues. Beneath the locker tag is sewn a rectangular mylar-fabric patch with "2002" printed on it in black ink. Pinched under the left bottom side of the locker tag are a set of three progressively longer white flag tabs; 56 100% Polyester, +2 Sleeve Length, +4 Body length. The Russell R logo is embroidered in red and Navy into the end of the left sleeve. Measuring the jersey, it has 10" sleeves and a 36" body, making it apparent that special tailoring has been added.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering and stitching on the jersey is unaltered. The jersey itself is in very good, bright, unfaded condition, showing light use that typical of a pitcher's jersey (no batting or base running, limited game appearances) There is a short fabric pull to the left of the nameplate on back. Its most obvious sign of use is the fraying/fading/curling of the tags, and some minor puckering between the layers of the twill lettering. There are two stray black ink felt-tip marks on top of the right shoulder, though the jersey is not autographed. There are no signs of any repairs.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine to pitcher C.C. Sabathia of the Cleveland Indians during the 2002 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Cliff Lee 2002 (first year) Cleveland Indians Home Game Vest Jersey

Examination Date: December 15, 2022 Certification Number: 22-1215J04

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2002 Cleveland Indians Cliff Lee #65 Russell white six-button size 50 (marked and measured) full-weight jersey vest. Chief Wahoo head logo embroidered patch in red, gray, sparkle silver and Navy on the left chest. Navy 3/16" knit soutache trim on the placket. The post 7/16/2002-only white with red border "JW" memorial disk (for trainer Jimmy Warfield) is sewn to the top of the right chest On back, player number in the proper block font in red outlined with sparkle silver outlined with Navy. Name on back above, radially arched and in the correct team font and in the same colors but with the blue outline drop-shadowed, as was the team style that year, and sewn on matching knit nameplate with a single-needle serged edge. The MLB Silhouetted batter patch on the back of the neck in red, white and Navy Blue. These characteristics match other 2002-tagged Indians jerseys in our reference archive. The lettering matches our templates in terms of style, colors, placement and outline-widths. The size of the jersey is reasonable for Lee (6' 3" 205 lbs).

2002 marked Cliff Lee's first appearance on a MLB roster; he pitched in only two games for the Indians in September, going 0-1 with a 1.78 ERA. He went on to a 13 year MLB career, was a four-time All Star and winner of the 2008 Cy Young Award.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell Authentic Collection locker tag is sewn on the outer, lower left shirt tail. The manufacturer tag style is correct for 2001-2003. There is no Russell size flag tag in the neck as is correct with team issues. Beneath the locker tag is sewn a rectangular mylar-fabric patch with "2002" printed on it in black ink. Pinched under the left bottom side of the locker tag is a "50 100% Polyester" tab. The Russell R logo is not embroidered onto the jersey body, as it was included on the sleeve of the team-issued undershirt.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all tagging, lettering and stitching on the jersey is unaltered. The jersey itself is in very good, bright, unfaded condition, showing light use typical of a late-season call up pitcher's jersey (no batting or base running, limited game appearances).There are no signs of any repairs.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light use, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine to pitcher Cliff Lee of the Cleveland Indians during the 2002 season.

Chapter 22

Seattle Mariners

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Mariners Uniform History Notes

- The Mariners were born in time for the 1977 season as an expansion team in the American League West. Seattle had long lobbied for a MLB team, and briefly had one for the single season of 1969 when the expansion Pilots made their debut. But financial misery with an unsatisfactory stadium situation had led to bankruptcy and a quick move to Milwaukee before the 1970 season. That Pilots team became the 1970 Milwaukee Brewers.
- In 1976, the American League promised an expansion team for Seattle in exchange for the city and various local governments dropping a six-year-old lawsuit for breach of contract related to the Pilots move. And with the newly built Kingdome (named for King County) about to be completed, the road had been paved to bring major league baseball back to Seattle in 1977.
- The Mariners' uniforms for 1977 were simple and attractive. Home whites used pullover jerseys and elastic waistband pants—the common style at the time. Trim was blue and yellow, the same colors as had been used by the short-lived Pilots almost a decade before. The uniform's key feature was the upside down trident-shaped "M" that was used in its wordmark. Road uniforms in 1977 were light blue with the word "Seattle" spelled out in a similar (but oddly, not identical) font as used on the team home jersey.
- From the beginning, player names are used on back, and have been used every year on all Mariners' game jerseys except the Sunday alternate home cream jersey introduced in 2015. The 1977 player numbers are an attractive, rounded, bold display custom font that bears some resemblance to the Padres' numbers of the same period.
- The inaugural style of home uniform is used unchanged through 1980. But the inaugural road uniform lasts only one year before it is changed for 1978 to make it slightly more flashy.
- Uniforms are all refreshed for 1981, and though they remain pullovers, the jersey now features bolder graphics and the team becomes early adopters of the trendy "racing stripe" trim introduced by the Expos in 1980. The baby blue road jersey still carries the city name on its front through 1984. For 1985, the road jersey changes to gray, and adopts the same "Mariners" wordmark as the home jersey. Home jerseys and road jerseys are identical for 1985–1986 save for the color of the fabric.
- The 1987 through 1992 period changes to the team logo and image. The "mod" style of the Mariners' uniforms up to this point is discarded for a very formal (almost boring) white or gray jersey with minimal trim, with the word "Mariners" spelled out in blue and yellow in a lightly stylized book font with serifs on the letters.
- For 1993, the team undergoes a makeover of sorts, with changes to team colors, though the general look of the new wordmark retains similarity to the old. The bright blue and yellow of the past are replaced with a combination of navy blue, teal, white, and metallic silver. A fancy nautical compass logo is added to home jersey fronts as well as on team sleeve patches. This compass will remain a standard element of all designs through this writing (2025).
- The minor year-to-year tweaks of the 1993 design on road and alternate jerseys is dizzying over the next 10 years. The charts on the pages that follow show how confusing the Mariners addition and deletion of individual styles had been. Through all of this, though, the home jersey has stayed with the same basic design for more than 30 years.
- During 1997–1999, the team experimented with vest-style jerseys at the urging of star player Ken Griffey Jr., who preferred this style uniform.
- Also during 1997–1999, the team frequently uses its button-down batting practice jersey as an alternate home game option.
- The popular bright "Northwest Green" (or teal) jerseys of 1994–1996 were reintroduced for 2011. A cream alternate is added for 2015, and minor changes are made to home and road jersey lettering, both front and back, that year as well.
- In 2023, the road gray is dropped and the alternate road blue becomes the full-time road jersey. This leaves the team without a road gray jersey for the first time since the 1984 season.
- Also in 2023, a City Connect uniform debuts, blending Seattle's baseball history with local cultural references. The royal blue jersey features gold and black accents that nod to the Seattle Pilots and Negro League Steelheads, while the lower-case "seattle" wordmark is borrowed from the Pilots' uniform. The bevel-styled gold lettering uses two yellow shades and a black drop shadow reminiscent of the PCL Seattle Rainiers' look. A "PNW" patch honors the Pacific Northwest with a trident-shaped "W,"
- Despite the changes in uniform styles over the years, the team has fairly consistently used a nautical theme it its wordmarks, logos and colors—a nod to the Pacific Northwest's historical importance as a maritime hub.

* The Road gray vest was never listed as an official jersey for the Mariners, yet it was worn in at least one road series during 1998. See the page ahead that details it for more information.

 The alternate home vest was listed in the 2000 MLB Style Guide (with pinstriped pants!) but did not appear on the field that year.

Barry Halper Collection

Home white jersey has "Mariners" spelled out across the front in two-color in an arch, M is an upside down trident. Two-color numbers on front left and on back, both are royal blue/yellow. Numbers are a special Mariners-only custom font, used only 1977–1980. Name on back in one-color royal blue, hand-crafted vertical arch style by the Wilson artist. However, because these jerseys saw hard use in the minors, most always the original names were stripped off. Ones found today are either missing the name on back or have had it replaced, usually incorrectly with a non-vertical arched name. Nameplates not used.

Mariners 1979 All-Star patch worn on left sleeve that year. That patch is then adopted as the team's secondary logo and remains on the sleeve for 1980, then becomes the team's primary logo and is replicated on caps as well for 1981.

One-year only design road blue jersey has Seattle spelled out across the front in two-color in an arch (royal blue/white only, no yellow). Also identify this jersey by the 1977-only blue/yellow/white knit collar and sleeve trim. Team first-year jersey manufactured by Goodman & Sons. The original set sent to minors where front Seattle was stripped. The example at top left is said by MEARS to be one of only two jerseys of this style to exist, original and unrestored. Nearly all those found today (including the one at bottom right, from my collection) have had all the lettering—even the front "Seattle"—restored. In the case of the #19 jersey, it came with a set of used, stripped lettering from the team that I sewed back on! Two-color numbers on front left and on back, both royal blue/white. Numbers are a special Mariners-only custom font, used only 1977–1980. Name on back in one-color royal blue. All Goodman lettering fonts appear hand-drawn and hand cut with scissors, with a great deal of inconsistency between examples.

Road blue jersey has “Seattle” spelled across the front in two-color royal blue/yellow in an arch. Identify this jersey by the blue/yellow/white sleeve end trim (different pattern than in 1977). Two-color numbers on front left and on back, both royal blue/yellow. Numbers are a special custom Mariners-only font, used only 1977–1980. Name on back in one-color royal blue, nameplates not used. Made by Rawlings, the lettering is decidedly more pro-quality than the 1977 road jersey made by Goodman. Original sets sent to minors where nearly all had front “Seattle” stripped off, and minor league team names applied. Nearly all found today are badly sun-faded and have had the front lettering restored, or else retain the secret of their past with minor league wordmarks still on front.

In 1981 only, three-color names on back on nameplates (right). 1982–1986 changes to one-color royal blue on nameplates. Rawlings makes the home jerseys in this period while Wilson makes the road ones. Each maker year- tags and set-tags its jerseys differently.

Almost all the jerseys of this series, both home and away, were stripped of their nameplates. A large percentage was stripped of their front crests and nameplates, and some, their numbers as well, and were completely re-lettered for use in the minor leagues. Most surviving examples have been restored or are awaiting restoration.

For 1985, the road jersey lettering changes to Mariners from the earlier Seattle wordmark. Rawlings takes over making the road jersey from Wilson. Aside from the change to gray fabric, the home and road jerseys are numbered and lettered identically. Nameplates are used, and an extra condensed font for names longer than about 8 letters is adopted by Rawlings. Oddly, back numbers on these jerseys are sewn exceptionally low, 10–11 inches from the collar instead of the typical eight inches.

Mariners Jerseys Demoted to the Minor Leagues

The Mariners were merciless in sending their jerseys to the minors. And since most of their minor league teams were not named “Mariners” these jerseys were thoroughly and completely stripped. I have restored more old Mariners jerseys than any other team!

More Mariners Recycled Jerseys: Converted & Then Converted Back

Anyone who has ever attempted to restore a jersey by replacing the old numbers or wordmark knows how much work it is to do. It can take hours to remove the old one properly, and even then, the chance of being left with an unacceptable result is very high, with uneven fading, fabric pulls and glue left behind, even holes, if not done very carefully.

That's why it is so surprising to me that through at least the mid-1980s, the Mariners stripped many MLB jerseys of all their lettering and recycled them to the Minor Leagues to be reused when their service in Seattle had ended. I would estimate that 90% of the 1977–1980 Mariners jerseys I have seen and probably half of them from 1981–1986 are either converted or restored. Just a few examples from my photo archives pictured here.

A very young Ken Griffey Jr.

Here are some typical examples of "restored" Mariners jerseys that show what one can expect. Unbelievably by today's standards, many jerseys had everything stripped off–team wordmark, player name and even numbers. They were recommissioned as minor league uniforms, as shown on the left side of this page. When collectors got a hold of them after having been thoroughly used in the minors, many have been horribly "restored," using newly-cut lettering of the wrong style, size and improperly arched. In some cases, original lettering was acquired (someone must have saved it) and re-sewn, but sloppily so. Bottom: Close-up of a single letter from the front of the 1977 "GALASSO" jersey from my personal collection, shown earlier in this chapter. Notice the ghosting and glue marks below the letter that shows that the new letter has been inexactly re-sewn in place.

The Mariners do a total team makeover for 1993 that changes everything, including the team colors. Gone are royal blue and yellow, replaced with navy, metallic silver, white, and a blue-green shade they call "Northwest Green." The front wordmark is navy/green/glitter white that makes it shimmer. Block style numbers and names are used on the back, two-color navy/Northwest Green. Names are on nameplates 1993–2006, then direct sewn 2007–2014. Mariners team-spec jerseys are universally simply year-tagged during 1993–2014. This nondescript but authentic team tagging and the fact that the Mariners pumped many team-tagged but blank-backed jerseys each year into the hobby have created a flood of fanciful Griffey, A-Rod, Ichiro, Randy Johnson, and other star-player lettered jerseys that are often claimed to be game worn. While there is nothing wrong with a collector or fan re-lettering a team jersey, buyer beware if you are looking for a verified gamer.

1997-1999 Batting Practice Jersey Used as Alternate Home Jersey

I am listing this jersey in the book twice because, though it is officially a batting practice jersey, the Mariners used it rather frequently 1997–1999 as an alternate home game jersey, following the discontinuance of their bright Northwest Green alternate jersey after the 1996 season, and right up to the time the team moved from the Kingdome to new Safeco Field in mid-1999. In fact, these jerseys were worn in the last game at the Kingdome on June 27 that year.

The jersey is a navy blue button front, lacking any trim. It remained in use as a batting practice jersey through the end of the 2000 season. Player name and numbers are Block font in two-color metallic silver/teal. Namplates used.

Identical to the Mariners' white home jersey, just minus the sleeves. Lettered identically as well. Worn with a navy blue undershirt, the official undershirt has the compass patch on the left sleeve (and the 20th anniversary patch on the right in 1997).

Players did not always wear the official undershirt with it, as is often the problem with vest jerseys, and one reason why teams sometimes use faux vests with attached sleeves to ensure "uniformity!"

This vest is tagged 1997, could it have been the prior year's jerseys they cut up?

There is no mention of a gray vest in the Mariners' media guide or the MLB Style Guide for 1998. But news photos shown here dated July 25, 1998 show the Mariners wearing these jerseys in a road series at Baltimore. Others are dated August 29 at the Yankees.

Here is the story: Ken Griffey Jr. continually pushed management to adopt a road vest as he preferred the sleeveless style. So, the team took one of its sets of road gray jerseys and hacked the sleeves off to try out how the style looked. After all, the team had begun using home vests the prior year that the team thought looked quite good, and Griffey was adamant he wanted to use the style on the road as well.

Notice the tagging on the close-up photograph. This jersey has a tag that says 1" Extra Sleeve Length, which is interesting since there are no sleeves on a vest at all! Worn at least eight games during July and August 1998, and this style did not return for 1999.

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10-20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch, called CFX by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of old.

2023 City Connect

The Mariners' City Connect entry combines and modernizes many features of Seattle's baseball and regional landmarks. The use of royal blue and shades of gold hearken back to the short-lived Seattle Pilots, while the black details (and pants) nod to the Negro League Seattle Steelheads. The lower-case front lettering is also borrowed from the Pilots, while the lettering's drop shadow is a reference to the Pacific Coast League's Seattle Rainiers' uniforms. The "PNW" sleeve patch, which stands for "Pacific Northwest," includes an image of Mount Rainier and the laurel leaves found on the Pilots' distinctive caps, which itself was a reference to the region's maritime and aviation industries.

Two other elements, visible on retail jerseys but not seen on the field include Mariners broadcaster Dave Niehaus' famous phrase, "My Oh My" above the jock tag, and "Sodo Mojo" inside the jersey collar, with "Sodo" a references to the area the team calls home. The crossed tridents, another early Mariners symbol that usually stand in for an "M" are oriented upwards, forming Ws, which the team says represents the state of Washington and the word "wins," which recalls the blue "W" lit on the T-Mobile Park roof after every victory.

Of note, in an era of simplification of jersey lettering, including common fonts and kiss-cut twill, the front lettering and back player numbers are rendered in a very complex multi-layer fashion to create a beveled appearance, similar to early Washington Nationals uniforms. This jersey exists on the Nike Flex Base template for one year before switching to Vapor Premier Elite in 2024.

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020-2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Mariners longstanding home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the knit trim around the neck and placket appears closer together than before. The smaller placket also means the team's front lettering is made smaller as well, though it still splits about the same as before. The Mariners do not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Mariners blue jersey, which was elevated to road jersey status from alternate in 2023 after the team eliminated their gray jerseys. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. For most teams, the standardization of player name lettering is an eyesore. However, the Mariners' previous name lettering on these jerseys was very ornate, fussy, and clunky. These new, tiny letters don't look great here, but they do look neater than the old ones that were very hard to space evenly across the jersey backs. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the team's front lettering is made smaller as well, though it still splits about the same as before. The Mariners do not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

2024-2025 City Connect

The switch to Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) in 2024 creates some small changes to the Mariners' City Connect jersey, introduced only the year prior. Collar and sleeve trim is now sewn in to the jersey rather than on it, which makes the neck trim appear wider, though the sleeve trim seems comparable. Though the placket on VPE is narrower than Flex Base, the "Seattle" lettering does not look like it was reduced in size very much, if at all, and it still breaks over the placket in much the same way. Despite the intricacies of the beveled back numbers, the Mariners use perforated twill on these jerseys, though the twill layering means that only parts of the numbers are perforated. The most significant change is, ironically, the least visible from the field. The heat pressed "sodo mojo" and "my oh my" slogans have switched places on the jersey - likely because the crossed tridents would no longer fit on the narrower VPE collar. Carryover City Connect jerseys are not updated in 2025, despite the updates to the team's other jerseys for the 2025 season.

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. The Mariners introduce a sponsor patch in 2025. Note that this jersey also uses Nike's new-for-2025 white jock tag. A handful of jerseys across the league use this new tag.

The Mariners dropped the ornate player name lettering on these jerseys in 2024, and though it does not return in 2025, the team instead uses a silver/navy/teal version of the back lettering used on their other jerseys, now in a larger size than in 2024. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. The Mariners introduce a sponsor patch in 2025.

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1980-1986 Batting Practice

Front logo is the upside down trident M in a star. This logo was originally created for the 1979 All-Star Game which was held in Seattle, but was adopted by the team and used for several years as its primary logo. These jerseys are found in both flat-hemmed style and with a curved shirt tail. The curved-tail jerseys are the later ones.

One-color white numbers on back appear to be heat pressed on some jerseys. No player names on back used.

An interesting and un-cataloged style of 5 on this Majestic game worn example. The number appears to be heat-pressed on "M's" on a baseball logo on the left chest is made of flocked felt. One color white block numbers on back. No player names on back.

I do not have confirmation on this style's specific end-date of use. The M in a Baseball logo was used by the team 1987–1992. I believe that the new style shown on a later page may have been used concurrently with this one starting in 1989, or perhaps these were used only in Spring Training 1989.

Both Rawlings and majestic supply the team.

1987-1992 Alternate Batting Practice Zip Neck

Shown here is the Mariners' edition of the seldom seen Majestic "Gamewarm-er" zip-neck batting practice jersey. These were offered to all teams by Majestic, but not used by all of them. This example is most likely a re-tail-sale version.

The jersey at top is mesh, the one below is solid nylon fabric.

Royal blue jersey is mesh, three-layer wordmark is sewn on yellow/blue/yellow 3D drop shadow. Numbers on back only, one-color yellow. The team was supplied jerseys by Majestic, Rawlings, and Russell. The Rawlings jerseys sometimes have bolder back numbers.

1987-1992 Road Batting Practice

The gray mesh version of the 1987–1992 batting practice jersey was worn on the road. It is possible that this style was worn for Spring Training only, as action photos of it in use are elusive. Wordmark is opposite colors from the home version, blue/yellow/blue 3D drop shadow. Numbers on back are one-color Block bold, compared to Block Standard on the home batting practice jersey of this style on the prior page.

1993 (Probable) Spring Training Batting Practice

These gray mesh jerseys show up in the hobby now and again, and I believe they were used by the Mariners exclusively in Spring Training during 1993. No names are used on back. Notice the embroidered Majestic logo on the sleeve, a characteristic of jerseys made for use by the team vs. those made for retail. Notice that these two examples have different colored back numbers, and we don't know which, or if both are correct. So far we have no action photos of these in use.

1993-1996 Batting Practice

With the team's change in wordmarks and colors for 1993, their new batting practice jersey is navy blue mesh and features a two-button Henley-style neck. The new "Mariners" wordmark with the compass nestled in the "M" is arched gently across the front. The Henley neck version is used 1993–1996, then the team switches to a full button front 1997–2000, and then returns to the two-button Henley style 2001–2002. The 1993–1996 jersey was made by both Majestic and Russell. Back numbers are single color gray.

(1997-1999 Also Used as an Alternate Home Jersey)

Left: This year tagged 1997 BP has no name on back, and numbers sewn higher that typical. It may be from Spring Training.

I am listing this jersey in the book twice—because though it is officially a batting practice jersey, the Mariners used it rather frequently as an alternate home game jersey following the discontinuance of their bright Northwest Green alternate jersey after the 1996 season, and right up to the time the team moved from the Kingdome to new Safeco Field in mid-1999. In fact, these jerseys were worn in the last game ever played at the Kingdome on June 27 that year.

The jersey is a solid navy blue button front, lacking any trim. It remained in use as a batting practice jersey through the end of the 2000 season.Player name and numbers are Block font in two-color metallic silver/teal. Nameplates used.

2001-2002 Batting Practice

The two-button Henley neck BP jersey that had been used in 1993–1996 returns for 2001–2002. Player NOB is omitted from these. Distinguish from the earlier style by the addition of the MLB logo Silhouetted Batter to the back of the neck, and the two-color metallic silver/teal green numbers on back, Majestic sleeve logo and tail tagging.

- Two-color silver/teal block numbers.
- No names on back.

2006 Batting Practice

The batting practice jersey is modified for 2006 with teal sleeves, and lasts only one year in this coloration.

2007-2010 Batting Practice

The Mariners' version of the new-for-2007 Majestic Cool Base batting practice jersey features a one-button neck and silver/teal side panel inserts.

No player names are used on back. All designs and lettering are now heat-transfer one-layer appliqués, no longer multi-layered sewn tackle twill.

The Mariners used this in at least one regular season game, on 8/23/2007 against the Rangers.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011-2013 Batting Practice

For 2011, the batting practice jersey once again becomes a button-front design.

Side panels are now solid gray, replacing the gray/green panels from the prior style. A gray panel is also used above the NOB.

Names and numbers are sewn twill in gray/green.

2014-2016 Batting Practice

For 2014, MLB refreshes batting practice jersey for all teams. The changes to the Mariners' jersey are minimal. All the same lettering is retained front and back. Narrow navy and gray knit trim is sewn to the sleeve ends and the neck opening. The back of the jersey is now solid navy, losing the gray panel above the player name that had been there before.

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

Bill Henderson Collection

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training-specific jersey intended to be worn for work-outs and games in spring training. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team.

The Mariners use their regular season teal alternate as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill/navy. The jersey also features a rubberized, CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading "2016" and "AZ" representing where the Mariners hold Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training-only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with some minor design modifications. Just as in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features special printed twill, this year decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill, in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from the year before.

The Mariners again use their regular season teal alternate as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “AZ” representing where the Mariners spend Spring Training.

2017-2019 Batting Practice

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base jersey material.

The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Player lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Mariners jersey is blue with teal back and underarm gussets. The "compass S" logo from their caps appears on the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank. Player numbers in gray/navy/green Block on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design theme of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts, but now simplified using only one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018 year-specific patterns. The Mariners use their regular-season teal alternate as their base. The name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "AZ" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training

2019 MLB Spring Training jerseys evolve on the theme of the last three years. Across the league, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the recent past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill last seen in 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns.

The Mariners introduce a new, light blue jersey that is not a part of their regular-season standard set. It has a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "ARZ," referencing their Spring Training home. The front logo, player names, and back numbers are navy blue/metallic silver/teal.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2022 Spring Training

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates.

For 2020–2022, the Mariners continue to use a jersey design separate from their regular-season standard set, in a light blue color, with navy blue/metallic silver/teal name and back numbers.

© GameWornGuides.com

2023 Spring Training

For 2023, the Mariners scrap the previous, Spring Training-only blue jersey and replace it with their existing teal alternate. It is likely the move is made as Nike attempted to limit the number of jerseys each team carried, which meant some teams replaced their spring-specific jerseys with one of their regular season alternates. The 2023 All-Star Game patch replaces the team's usual disc patch for that season only.

Special Events Jerseys

1991 St. Patrick's Day

These micromesh green jerseys were worn by the Mariners for St. Patrick's Day of 1991. The Mariners do not generally participate in St. Patrick's day events.

The maker is Speedline, a company based in Tampa, Florida and founded in 1936 that makes a wide variety of custom athletic wear for colleges and high schools. This is the only instance we can find of them making anything worn by an MLB team on-field. Their logo on the sleeve was surely not authorized, as while any company could supply uniforms to teams, only the official suppler to MLB (Rawlings) was allowed to show their logo on the sleeve.

1992 Mid-Season "Second Opening Day"

July 16, 1992, when new owners completed their purchase of the Mariners in mid-season, the M's had an "opening day" celebration. To mark the occasion, the M's wore their usual white home uniforms, but with SEATTLE on the jerseys instead of the usual MARINERS. The new ownership wanted to send a strong message that the team was the Seattle Mariners, and that they were in town to stay.

This gesture had great significance at the time, because the team had been the subject of constant relocation rumors, and the fans in Seattle had still not forgotten how the Pilots were snatched away just after Spring Training in 1970 to become the Milwaukee Brewers, a scant one year after they had started playing in Seattle.

These game jerseys were made by Rawlings, which explains the lack of a sleeve logo. They are identical to the 1992 home jerseys save for the replacement of the word MARINERS with SEATTLE.

1993 Turn Back the Clock to 1977

The Ken Griffey-signed jersey shown here with TBC tagging was made to team issued specifications at a later date by Mitchell & Ness for a Griffey signing, experts recognize the Cooperstown Collection tagging as being from 1999 or so.

May 22, 1993: The Mariners marked the 25th anniversary of their Inaugural season of 1977, playing the Royals in Kansas City. The uniforms are made by Mitchell & Ness. The Royals' Turn Back the Clock day was dedicated to their own inaugural season on 1969.

The Royals dressed in 1969 replicas that day. The Mariners version is only close and not identical to the Goodman original (bottom left). Both the Seattle wordmark and numbers on front are larger and more artistically rendered on the replica than on the originals.

1994 Turn Back the Clock to 1955 PCL Seattle Rainiers

On June 11, 1994,the Seattle Mariners paid tribute to the Seattle Rainiers, the Pacific Coast League (PCL) team that represented the city from 1938 to 1960. Turn Back the Clock uniforms were made by local supporter Ebbets Field Flannels. In previous editions, we had shown images of retail jerseys that did not match what was used on field. We have now come across a game worn (and signed) version from Hall of Famer Goose Gossage, who spent his final season with the Mariners in 1994. Note the hologram on the Ebbets Field Flannels tag is to authenticate the signature, not the jersey. Based on the image shown at right of an actual 1955 Rainiers jersey, the front lettering on the throwbacks seems thinner in comparison, but this recreation is reasonably faithful overall.

1995 Negro Leagues Tribute (1946 Seattle Steelheads)

On September 9, 1995 the Seattle "Steelheads" Mariners played the Kansas City Royals who dressed as the Kansas City Monarchs for this Negro Leagues Tribute game. Wool flannel uniforms made for both teams by Ebbets Field Flannels. So far, we have been unable to find a single photo of the backs of the jerseys on that day. The back number font on the jersey as it is marketed by EFF is shown below, and an unconfirmed example of one claimed to be a team issued jersey is shown bottom middle. If any collectors have more information on these 1995 jerseys we'd like to know.

1996 Turn Back the Clock to 1946 PCL Seattle Rainiers

July 31, 1996: The Mariners played a TBTC road game in Milwaukee as the 1946 Pacific Coast League Seattle Rainiers, wearing vest jerseys vs. the 1946-attired Brewers.

Enthusiast and historian Moriah Levin, formerly of Mitchell & Ness tells this story: "The (1996) Rainiers jersey is interesting because in the hobby there are three versions of the jersey. Mitchell & Ness made the jerseys for the Mariners TBTC game with sleeves. M&N always makes a few extras of the game TBTC jerseys (same tagging) for retail sale (photos at left). The ones that went to the Mariners and were game used have the sleeves cut off. The shoulder arm-openings on the jersey are rough and look like they were cut. After the game, Mitchell & Ness was asked to make another batch of the jerseys for Griffey to sign for collectors (right). This third batch was made as vests and thus the cut is as a vest and the shoulder-arm openings have regular finished seams. All of the material, numbers, lettering, and tags are the same on all three."

The first set: 1996 for retail sale, not game worn.

The second set: game worn with rough-cut sleeves.

The third set: also not game worn, but autographed and numbered.

2005 Turn Back the Clock to 1938 PCL Seattle Rainiers

These 1938 throwbacks were made of double knit by Majestic. Note the extra-long period style sleeves which were doubtlessly annoying to some players.

The Rainiers were actually named for the Rainier Brewing Company, the team's new owner in 1938. The brewery took its name from the region's mountain landmark. Prior to 1938, the team had been known as the Seattle Indians.

The game was played in San Diego vs. the Padres who dressed as the 1936 PCL Padres, June 25, 2005.

July 9, 2006: The Mariners appear as the 1969 Seattle Pilots and play the 1969-jersey clad Tigers at home in near flawless cream colored double knit replica uniforms made by Majestic. The original 1969 Pilots uniforms were flannel, and are pictured in the Brewers' chapter of the unabridged edition of this book for further reference. The replicas are very well executed and many players wore their pants in the proper style to show off the Pilots' striped stirrups.

2010 Turn Back the Clock to 1995

On June 5, 2010 the Mariners and the Angels held a Turn Back the Clock to 1995 day. Both teams wore uniforms from that year. The Mariners chose to wear their 1994–1996 “Northwest Green” alternate jerseys, made by Majestic in the 1995–1996 style (without the white outline around the wordmark). The throwback proved so popular with fans that the team reintroduced the style the following season on a full time basis as a home alternate.

2013 Memorial Day

Read the full story on MLB's Memorial Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

MLB's decision that all teams should wear camouflage-lettered jerseys for Memorial Day on May 27 resulted in these uniforms. Of all the teams in baseball, the Mariners' uniforms were among the least objectionable, given to the fact that the normally hard-to-see camouflage (imagine that) has a green outline on the wordmark, and teal outlines (official color is called "Marlin Blue") on the name and numbers to set it off from the white fabric.

2015 Negro Leagues Tribute (1946 Seattle Steelheads)

Derek Damian collection

On May 16, the Mariners honor the 1946 Negro League Seattle Steelheads for a second time, the first being 20 years earlier. The Steelheads played in the Western Coast Negro League, which folded after only one month of games. This version of the Steelheads jersey differs greatly from the one used in 1995, probably because there is little record of what the Steelheads wore in 1946. Though both are home jerseys, this one says “Seattle” on front, whereas the 1995 version featured the team name. This Majestic knit jersey also features player numbers in black/gray on back in Block, and the city name in black/gray on front, with thick black braid around the neck and placket. The opposing Red Sox wear uniforms of the Negro League Boston Royal Giants.

2015 Memorial Day

On the road for Memorial Day, May 25, 2015, the Mariners wear their gray jersey as a base for the camo treatment. Once again, the top layer of twill is replaced by desert camouflage. Where the contrast on the teal jersey was an improvement in 2014, this jersey suffers the same fate of illegibility that most gray jerseys with camo lettering do. The white and teal outlines provide some minor contrast up close, but absolutely none from a distance. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/white rather than its typical colors from 2014.

2015 Independence Day

Read the full story on MLB's Independence Day Jerseys in Chapter 5.

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palate might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar.

The Mariners wear their road gray jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars; all lettering outlined in red, including their front logo as well as back numbers. Player names on back are in red. Two-layer twill replaces the usual three-color lettering on the jerseys. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

2016-2017 Mother's Day

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms Mother's Day, Sunday, May 8. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white.

The Mariners wear their road gray jerseys, and the typically three-color front lettering and back numbers are rendered in pink with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are sewn in single-color dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally blue, becomes dark gray. The style returns on May 13–14, 2017.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Mariners apply the camouflage trimmings to their home white jerseys for the game on May 30. The typically three-color front lettering and back numbers are rendered in two-color woodland camo with a black outline, and player names appear in single-color black. Like other teams, their sleeve patches are reduced to shades of green, gray, and black, and trim elements are single-color black rather than the usual blue.

2016-2017 Father's Day

All teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms Father's Day, June 19. 2016 and June 17–18, 2017. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white.

The Mariners wear their road gray jerseys, and the typically three-color front lettering and back numbers are rendered light blue with dark gray outlines. The player names on back are single-color dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally blue, becomes dark gray.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1984

For a June 25 game against the Cardinals, the Mariners once again turn the clock back to 1984, sporting replicas of their royal blue and gold pullovers worn at home from 1981–1986. Like the originals, the Mariners wordmark and Block back and front numbers are royal blue/yellow/ royal blue, while names on back are royal blue on a nameplate. These Majestic knit jerseys are decent recreations, however, the front team name seems smaller here than on the originals, though the larger front numbers appear to match up well with the 1984 version. The Cardinals wore 1984 road jerseys to match.

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck.

The Mariners are on the road and wear their alternate road blue jersey. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill and the Mariners select the red twill version with gray outlines to replace their typically three-color front lettering and front and back numbers, with a gray player name on back. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. New for 2016, team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue, replacing team colors.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1989/ Griffey Number Retirement Weekend

Stephen Kraljic Collection

In honor of Ken Griffey Jr.'s enshrinement in the Baseball Hall of Fame, the Mariners plan a weekend-long celebration for their superstar, including uniform tributes and retiring his number throughout the organization. On Friday, August 5, the team throws back to 1989, Griffey's rookie year, with these Majestic knit jerseys. Like the originals, these feature the Mariners wordmark on front in royal blue/ yellow/royal blue, with Block front and back numbers in royal blue. Names on back are also royal blue and on a nameplate. Even the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo is correctly absent from the back collar. In contrast to the original, this one features the royal blue and gold version of the Griffey Number Retirement patch that all of the team's jerseys sported over the celebratory weekend.

2016 Hispanic Heritage

For Salute to Latin American Béisbol Day at Safeco Field on September 4, the Mariners again don their Marineros jersey. This time, however, it is updated to the new lettering style that the team adopted in 2015, but oddly did not apply to the Marineros jerseys worn that year. The Majestic Flex Base jersey changes the front wordmark to Spanish, but all else remains the same as their usual home jerseys.

2017 Memorial Day

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Mariners apply this style to their road gray jerseys as worn on May 27–29, 2017.

2017 Turn Back the Clock to 1977

Stephen Kraljic Collection

The Mariners celebrate their 40th anniversary throughout 2017, including throwing back to their first home jersey from 1977 on June 24. The team held similar throwback nights for their 20th and 30th anniversaries as well, so this style V-neck pullover, here made in full-knit by Majestic, is familiar to the home fans.

Aside from the blue name on back font, which was vertically arched and more spaced-out on the originals, these jerseys are very well done, down to the Mariners' custom numbers in blue/yellow. The visiting Astros wore their 1977 "Tequila Sunrise" rainbow jerseys, which were so distinctive at the time, they served as both home and road uniforms.

2017 Independence Day (Road)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the new twill—appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck.

On July 1–2, 2017, the Mariners wear their road gray jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

2017-2018 Independence Day (Home)

The Mariners were one of the handful of teams that played both home and road games on Independence Day weekend 2017. The Mariners use the same colors of special twill lettering on these as their road jerseys for 2017. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized “stars and stripes” pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. \

On July 3–4, 2017 and again July 2–4, 2018, the Mariners wear their home white jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue.

2017-2018 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with hand-written black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font.

On August 25–27, 2017 and August 24–26, 2018, the Mariners wear jerseys with teal bodies and Columbia blue sleeves with metallic silver nicknames and numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide bright blue/white/Columbia blue trim. The front features a straight-across version of their normally arched home lettering without the compass rose on the "M", here rendered in bright blue/metallic silver/blue kiss-cut lightweight twill.

2017-2018 Hispanic Heritage

The Mariners return with a new incarnation of their longstanding "Marineros" Salute to Latin American Béisbol Night jerseys on September 9, 2017 and September 8, 2018. This one takes advantage of subtle printing on the main layer of twill, a practice borrowed from recent Spring Training jerseys. Here, the printed twill (which is used throughout the uniforms including front "Marineros" wordmark, and back names and numbers) is printed with the names of the home countries of Mariners Latin American players. Surprisingly, the effect is visible in game photos, though, naturally, unreadable except for close inspection. Otherwise, the jersey is the same as the team's normal home jerseys, including the navy/teal version of the team's 40th anniversary patch on the right sleeve in 2017.

2018 Memorial Day

The 2018 Memorial Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017, with dark olive green/black front lettering and numbers joined by solid-color black player names on back. The outlines are nearly impossible to see as the two colors are so close in hue to each other. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team-specific sleeve patches also are repeated from 2017 with an olive green and black treatment. Trim elements are again simplified to single-color black, and a green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the US military, is stitched to the right sleeve. The Mariners apply this style to their home white jerseys on May 26–28, 2018.

2018 Turn Back the Clock to 1979

Stephen Kraljic Collection

On the road against the “Rainbow Guts”-clad Astros on August 10, 2018, the Mariners break out these well-executed throwbacks to their 1979 road jerseys. The main difference here vs. the originals is the player name font on back, which is a little taller and narrower, but this set very accurately represents the team’s 1979 road look, down to the Mariners’ custom number font. The patch of the Mariners’ trident-M logo in a star also correctly resides on the left sleeves. Majestic crafted this V-neck pullover in full-weight knit for the game.

2018 Turn Back the Clock to 1998 Turn Ahead the Clock

Call it historic, call it infamous, or just call it silly; but the Mariners pioneered "Turn Ahead the Clock" night in 1998 in a game against the visiting Royals, a concept that was copied for an MLB promotion enlisting many teams the following season. The Mariners are never a team to let a good anniversary go by unrecognized, so here we have a Turn Back the Clock jersey to a Turn Ahead the Clock jersey. Majestic made the originals only 20 years prior, so one would think these would be identical, but somehow that's not the case. The number fonts are slightly off, more so on the front numbers which are just smaller versions of the back numbers, where on the originals, they were much wider than their back counterparts. The name font is also less bold than the 1997 entry, though the font itself is a good match. The jersey fabrication on these two-button sleeveless jerseys differs too, mainly from advances in garment technology. This version is made in Cool Base fabric vs. the original knit, and the compass rose front logo is sublimated into the fabric where the originals used silk-screening. The Royals were the (lucky?) team to visit the Mariners for this Throw Back to the Future event, but went in an entirely different direction for their uniforms. Perhaps Majestic had lost the templates for their jerseys, too.

2019 Turn Back the Clock to 1969 Seattle Pilots

For a second time in their history, the Mariners throw back to the one-year expansion 1969 Seattle Pilots, who are now the Milwaukee Brewers. And for the second time Majestic creates these stunningly beautiful and historically accurate reproductions of that short-lived team's unique home uniforms. Exacting in every detail, down to the now-unusual belt loop pattern that the Pilots used (which was also present on the 2006 throwbacks) these full-knit uniforms deserve nothing but praise.

Visiting the Astros (a team they seem to face often in throwback games) on June 28, 2019, the Mariners wear replicas of their 1987–1992 road set, here made in full-knit by Majestic. And they are very nicely done, duplicating the originals very closely, down to the nameplates on back. Like the originals, a royal blue/yellow/royal blue 3D drop shadow Mariners wordmark is on front with simple blue numbers on front and back in Block Bold.

2019, 2022-2023 Hispanic Heritage

The Mariners return with a new incarnation of their longstanding "Marineros" Salute to Latin American Béisbol Night jerseys on September 15, 2019 (made by Majestic) and September 24, 2022 and September 17, 2023 (made by Nike). This one repeats the practice of subtle printing on the main layer of twill from the last two years of this promotion, but here applies it to the team's alternate home cream jersey for the first time. Again, the main layer of twill (used throughout the uniforms including front wordmark, which is changed to read "Marineros," and back numbers) is printed with the home countries of Latin American players in MLB. Surprisingly, the effect is visible in game photos, though, naturally, unreadable except for close inspection. Otherwise, the jersey is the same as the team's normal home alternate cream jerseys. The 2023 version has the All-Star Game patch replacing the team disc patch.

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its head, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019. Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys.

The Mariners wear a black jersey with the straight-across "Mariners" lettering, carried over from the last two Players Weekend promotions, with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in black/gray with gray nickname on back.

2021-2023 Negro League Tributes (1946 Seattle Steelheads)

This elegant uniform, made by Nike in cream-colored knit, has wide navy braid around the neck opening and placket, while front and back lettering are navy/gray. The original Steelheads only lasted one abbreviated season as charter members of the of the West Coast Negro Baseball Association, a minor league circuit owned by Harlem Globetrotters founder Abe Saperstein and the legendary Jesse Owens.

Prototypes and Oddballs

1977 Prototype Home

This is a sample 1977 Mariners jersey in the 1977–1980 style used by the team at the very start of their existence. How do we know it is from 1977 and not any of those other years? The secret is in the Wilson neck tag. This is a 1974–1977 style tag; there is no serif (or "foot" on the base of the "4" in the size designation of 42. Starting in 1978 the font changed, and also the ® mark that had been above the word WILSON moved to below the word for 1978. Check out the "Tagging" chapter in this guide to see for yourself.

The white twill tag sewn inside the back of the neck lists all the details exhibited by this sample garment. It shows the style code for the trimmed jersey body, the fabric type used, the style code for the front and back lettering that surely code-matches to patterns at the Wilson art department. It also tells us that the front numbers are (nominally) 4" tall; the back ones are 8". Notice that this sample jersey does not have a player name on back; it appears the decision to add them came after this sample was made. When no names on back are used, the back numbers are generally 6" from the collar. When names are added, the numbers are moved down to about 8" from the collar, sometimes a little more.

Also notice a fine detail: the Mariners' stylish font is closely related to the one the Padres used 1978–1984, those jerseys also made by Wilson. The Mariners font is less bold and a bit taller/skinnier than the Padres' but the font characteristics are very similar. Notice the "clocking" of the number 9, so that the bottom is tilted at about a 22 degree angle. So often, in restorations and reproduction, the bottom of the 9 (and the top of its cousin the 6) are incorrectly set flat to the ledger line. Here, you can see precisely how the artist designed it to be placed.

How many samples were made before this one was selected? Generally a team will review three or four different finalists "in the cloth" before making their decision. The losers are then discarded, or sometimes sneak out the back door for us to find decades later!

1977 Spring Training Orphan Home Jerseys

Prior to the 2000s, in spring training each year, MLB teams wore their prior season uniforms, saving their new-season duds fro opening day. But when the Mariners went to their first spring training in 1977, there were of course no prior year uniforms to wear! Therefore, they needed uniforms to wear before opening-day. These sets of home jerseys used by the Mariners in 1977 spring training were surely advance-planned to be sent to the minor leagues after the regular season started for the first year 1977 Mariners. The back numbers are sewn too high to allow for a name on back above, and no player names were used. The team tagging on the tails differs from the style used for 1977 Mariners regular season home jerseys, which used lower-placed numbers on back and had a player name above. The Mariners had two minor league organizations also called “Mariners” in 1977–1978, with the class AAA San Jose Missions added in 1978.
I have collected several photos of these spring training jerseys in my files, but had the chance to evaluate and authenticate this one that was likely the jersey issued to catcher Larry Cox. It had the Mariners crest on front replaced at one point with one that said “Missions” before someone converted it back to a Mariners crest.

These are the 1977 "road" uniforms worn by the Mariners in their first spring training. Sports Illustrated photos show entertainer (and part-owner of the club) Danny Kaye visiting the Mariners in Spring Training for their upcoming inaugural season of 1977. Notice the light blue road jerseys say "Mariners" on the front, not the "Seattle" that were unveiled just a few weeks later. The use of the team name and not the city was likely purposely used on these so they could be re-used in the minors without needing to strip "Seattle" off the fronts. Also note that the trident shaped "M" on the road jerseys is not vertically arched like the one on the home jersey is, and that the wordmark on the blue jerseys is different than the one on the white jerseys (notice especially the "ers" in Mariners). Goodman manufacturer tags are clearly visible on the jerseys hanging in the 1977 locker room. No names were used on back. These spring training road jerseys were passed down and used in the Minor Leagues at San Jose in the Pacific Coast League.

1977 Spring Training Orphan Exceptional Original Example

Mariners collector Sherman Chan supplied these images. He stumbled upon this jersey in his collecting activities. He says, “The seller said that his father used to work for NBC Sports and in late April 1977, NBC was scheduled to work a Mariners vs. Yankees game. The seller’s father made the acquaintance of the Mariners’ equipment manager who told him that the club used this style jersey during spring training but it wasn’t being used for the regular season so the equipment manager offered one to the seller’s father and he took this #6 jersey.

Photos of the Mariners in their very first Spring Training now four decades ago are extremely hard to come by. Sneaked out the back door before it was sent to the minors, this one was spared the ravages that most Mariners’ 1977 spring training jerseys were subjected to.

1979: Willie Horton's Custom Henley-Neck

The Mariners did not wear two-button Henley neck jerseys in 1979, but designated hitter Willie Horton did.

It is clear that Horton did not like a tight neck opening on his uniform. Below center, he is seen playing for the Texas Rangers in 1977 with his (team issue) two-button Henley opened up wide. And with the Tigers a couple of years prior he has clearly ripped his V-neck open to give himself more room. Traded to the Mariners from the Rangers, he adopted the style of his prior team regardless of what the "uniform" standard was. Apparently, the player had his uniform shirt tailored to his liking—without seeking approval—and wore it that way at least in the 1979 season. His final season in MLB was 1980 for the Mariners, and it would be speculation that he may have tailored that uniform himself as well.

1981 Batting Practice Jerseys Used for Road Game

Reproduced from uni-watch.com
By Paul Lukas, December 28, 2021

What's going on here? There's a lot to process in the photo shown above. The coach is wearing a Brewers cap, the player is wearing a Rangers helmet, and both of them are wearing jerseys with the Mariners' old trident logo. Was this some sort of celebrity all-star game? A beer league game? A misguided pair of Halloween costumes?

Nope—those are both big leaguers taking part in an official MLB game. The date was May 31, 1981, and that's Mariners third base coach Cananea Reyes on the left and Mariners outfielder Jeff Burroughs on the right. They're dressed like that because Seattle's jerseys, caps, helmets, and other gear were stolen from the Rangers' stadium prior to the game, forcing the M's to take the following steps:

• Their BP jerseys weren't stolen, so they wore those for the game.

• They wanted to buy and wear retail Mariners caps, but the Rangers' concessionaires were sold out of those, so they bought Brewers caps instead because Milwaukee's blue/yellow color scheme was a fairly good match.

• They wore the Rangers' batting helmets (and so did the Rangers, obviously, so the two teams were basically trading the helmets back and forth between their dugouts each half-inning).

A few moments after that photo was taken, Burroughs was tagged out at the plate by Rangers catcher Larry Cox, providing the odd spectacle of base runner and catcher both wearing the same headwear logo. Footnote: Despite the mismatched attire, the Mariners won, 5-3.

The Seattle Mariners were forced to sport hand-me-down chic...
UPI Archives, June 1, 1981

ARLINGTON, Texas -- The Seattle Mariners were forced to sport hand-me-down chic during their game Sunday against the Texas Rangers thanks to the thieves who broke into the visitors' clubhouse and stole their uniforms.

Taken were all the Mariners' batting helmets, 22 uniform tops, 24 caps and five catcher's mitts values at about $3,500.

Mariners officials tried to purchase Seattle caps from concessionaires, but they were out of stock. Instead, the team had to settle for Milwaukee Brewer caps, which also have a blue and gold color scheme.

The Seattle catchers borrowed mitts from the Rangers and Mariners batters used Rangers batting helmets. They all wore Mariners warm-up jerseys during the game.

However, their attire didn't matter as Joe Simpson went 3-for-5 and drove in three runs and Dan Meyer was 4-for-5 with an RBI to lead Seattle to a 5-3 victory.

1981-1984 Sample Road

Russell Athletic didn't become a major player in MLB uniforms until 1992, but if this jersey is what we think it is, it means they tried to break in decades earlier. This jersey appears to be a 1981–1984 Mariners road jersey—minus the name on back. It is possible that Russell made this up as a sample for the team. The blue "R" logo with the red eagle head was adopted by the brand in 1983, so this jersey's tagging would be era-appropriate.

The other possible explanation is that this is a sample for a turn back the clock game Russell made for the Mariners while serving as their official uniform supplier from 1992–2004. However, except for very rare occurrences in jerseys from early 1992, Russell tagging for MLB jerseys in that era would have had "Diamond Collection" or "Authentic Collection" branding on them. But, there is still a small chance that this was made for review in 1991–1992, just as Russell was taking on the team's contract

The Mariners did not wear a throwback to this particular jersey until 2010, by which time Majestic was their supplier.

Reader info that would help us clarify this one is welcome!

1987 Prototype Road

Though not confirmed, it seems reasonable that this uniform, acquired by dealer Ballpark Heroes though its usual team sources, was a prototype design at some point. We can point to 1987, the year that the Mariners redesigned their team look to one similar to this—though not exactly the same—but chose Rawlings as their supplier. Adding credence to the idea is the fact that Speedline Athletic of Tampa Florida, a major producer of college athletics, but not a supplier to MLB, made the Mariners St. Patrick's Day jerseys in 1991 (discussed in the Special Events Jerseys section), and boldly stuck their logo on the sleeve certainly without the approval of MLB to do so. Only the official supplier to MLB was afforded that right, and in 1991, that manufacturer was Rawlings.

Oddballs: One Prototype and Two “Oops”

- Top left:* Northwest Green Vest Prototype*: The Mariners wore vests for several years in the 1990s. Reportedly, Ken Griffey Jr. preferred this style and was always pushing for their adoption. This Northwest Green Russell prototype is sewn in the 1995–1996 style, but was never used on-field by the team .
- Top right:* Player without a compass? The TV shot at the top right shows player Ichiro’s on-field jersey missing its compass logo, normally found above the “M” in “Mariners."
- Bottom right:* Oops. this navy retail Authentic jersey with 2000–2003 Russell tagging features the home jersey wordmark, the one with navy as its central color instead of silver. More likely a mistake than a prototype.

1997 Prototype Vest/Undershirt

We've established already that Ken Griffey Jr, the Mariners young superstar, was a strong proponent of the vest-style jersey, and campaigned to have the Mariners adopt one for their use. In 1997, the team did. The jersey at left appeared on an auction site and I strongly suspect that it is a 1997 vest prototype that Russell created for the Mariners' consideration. The team's secondary compass logo is on the chest. It has a blank back, and as is the custom with some prototypes, it features the year of design as its player number. Then, some time after, the jersey at top right appeared for sale on an auction site. Close photo examination leads us to suspect it is likely the very same jersey as the one at left, though we can't be certain. The front tail tag is one that Russell last used in 1996.

© GameWornGuides.com

More 1997 Prototype Vests

These two prototype jerseys are likely from the same exercise that had created the white one on the prior page. The Russell tagging is from the 1995–1999 period, and the “97” on the chest of the top one certainly signifies the year of the design proposal.

The top navy vest has all the same elements as the white vest seen prior, only with silver knit trim and metallic silver over Mariner Green lettering.

The bottom navy vest with matching undershirt has wide (almost garish) sparkle-silver knit trim around the armholes and three-color lettering in a color scheme that would be adopted by the team for their alternates in 2003—seven years later. The undershirt features the team disk patch sewn to its left sleeve

1997: First Jackie Robinson Day and The Start of a Trend

Now an annual event, Jackie Robinson Day is marked each year on April 14, commemorating the first time a Black man played in MLB, April 15, 1947. Mariner Ken Griffey Jr. received permission for that day to switch his usual #24 to Robinson's #42, and in doing so set the precedent for every team changing every player's number to 42 for one day, each April 14 in the years to come, starting in twelve seasons later, in 2009.

From MLB.com: "Griffey was the first player to come up with the idea of wearing No. 42 on April 15. Interestingly, he implemented it twice.

To trace the first time he broached the idea, we have to go all the way back to April 15, 1997, the 50th anniversary of Robinson's Major League debut, and the day Selig retired his number. Griffey, who was playing for the Mariners at the time, asked that his uniform number be flip-flopped, switching from No. 24 to 42.

Fast forward 10 years, and Griffey again wanted to wear No. 42 to commemorate the 60th anniversary of Robinson's debut. But this time, since the number was retired, he had to ask permission.

So he called Selig at home.

"I said, 'Would it be possible if I wore 42 on Jackie Robinson Day?'" Griffey recalled during an interview with Harold Reynolds on MLB Network. "We had a 10-minute conversation. [Selig] said, 'Is it OK if I call Rachel [Robinson, Jackie's wife] and ask if it's OK?'"

Selig called Griffey back the next day and granted the request, but added he would like to extend the offer to wear No. 42 to anyone who wanted to.

"I said, 'The more, the merrier,'" Griffey said.

That year, Griffey and a handful of Black players from other teams took up the offer and wore No. 42. That was the protocol for the next two seasons—players had the option to wear the number, but it was an individual decision.

In 2009—five years after MLB officially designated April 15 as Jackie Robinson Day—Selig expanded the exercise. MLB announced that everyone who wore a uniform—players, coaches and managers—-would wear No. 42. That tradition continues today.

2003 Canceled Tour of Japan Jerseys

In 2003, the Mariners and A's were scheduled to travel to Japan for a two-game, season-opening series on March 25–26. Despite the neutral site, the A's were to be the home team for the two contests. Just a few days before the teams were scheduled to travel, Major League Baseball canceled the trip out of concern for a possible war between the United States and Iraq. The games were rescheduled to take place in Oakland during the regular season.

Given the last-minute change of plans, it is understandable that the teams would have already made up jerseys, including special ad patches for the tour's sponsor Hisamitsu, a pharmaceutical company. Here is one example, a road jersey made up pitcher Gil Meche that went unworn.

This is the only such example we've seen, so it is unclear what happened to the rest of them. Perhaps the two teams simply removed the ad patches and put the jerseys into regular circulation?

Both teams did eventually make it to Japan to start the season in 2012.

2006 Sample Alternates

You aren't seeing double, but you are seeing something of a mystery.

Here you have two identical samples for a 2006 Mariners alternate jersey. Made in full-weight knit by Majestic, both share the same details in terms of jersey color, lettering style and pattern. Both are devoid of any trim and have the same patch on the left sleeve. Both even use "Player" (on a nameplate) and "6" (representing 2006, the year of the jersey) on back.

The only distinguishing feature? The text on the sample tag inside the placket. The jersey on the left reads "MAR-ALT06" and the one on the right says "MAR-06-ALT-J-FINAL."

OK, so an open-and-shut case then, this is the prototype and the identical final choice for the team's new-for-2006 alternate jersey.

But wait...the Mariners already had this exact, same jersey as early as 2003. But they did switch from Russell to Majestic when using this, so that's what this was for...but no, that had already occurred in 2005.

So what is it? Hard to know exactly, The team did lighten the color of the blue alternate jersey slightly in 2008, this may have been a test for that process, which may have taken time to implement. Aside from this, the jersey didn't otherwise change except for losing the nameplates (present here) in 2007, and then losing the white outline around the compass rose in 2009.

If any readers know more about these, let us know!

2005-2019: Félix Hernández Knit Jerseys Only

2015

Mariners legend Félix Hernández was faithful to his one team during his 15 seasons in the big leagues. And through that time, he was partial to one kind of jersey construction, traditional double knit. Though jerseys went from knit to Cool Base to Flex Base while he played from 2005–2019, he stuck with good old knit whenever he could. Except for a few exceptions for special holiday and throwback jerseys, it is possible to find King Félix's game worn and team issued jerseys in knit construction from seasons well after they were available to other players. Like the Cardinals did for Yadi Molina, who harbored the same feelings about knit jerseys, the Mariners went out of their way to outfit their longstanding ace with the jerseys he preferred. Several examples from throughout his later career, when other jersey constructions became the norm, are shown here.

2012 Property of Ichiro and Tiny Customizations

Lots of baseball players have become so famous that we all know them by their first names. Some have even put their first names on the backs of their jerseys. But only one player we know about falls into both of those categories AND had his first name on his jersey tagging. In at least two examples, we have seen what are advertised as game used Ichiro jerseys with "Property of Ichiro" on the tail tagging where "Property of Seattle Mariners" usually appears. During his career, Ichiro had a deal with a company to market his memorabilia, so it is likely that, given his star power, he was allowed to order and use these jerseys in games to then sell them through his marketing partner. Here we have examples from two different 2012 jerseys, a one alternate and one home.

Note also on both examples that there is a hand-written note changing the +2" sleeve customization tag to +.25" (it is very hard to see on the alternate jersey tag). Apparently Ichiro liked longer sleeves—but only very slightly longer. We have also included an image from a 2011 Ichiro jersey (with "Property of Seattle Mariners" tagging) that includes this same notation that is easier to read. Also shown at right, tags from Ichiro's time with the Yankees (2014) and Marlins (2015), showing that the .25" modification was more formally expressed with actual printed tags later in his career.

2016 Griffey Tribute #24 Batting Practice Jerseys

As part of the weekend of festivities honoring Ken Griffey, Jr.'s organization-wide number retirement, the Mariners gave the Kid's #24 one final appearance, and this time everyone wore it. For batting practice on August 6, every Mariners player wore #24 (with his own name) on the back of the team's typical batting practice jerseys. On the left sleeve, the BP jerseys also featured the blue and teal version of the Griffey Number Retirement patch that all of the team's jerseys sported over the celebratory weekend. Many players also wore their hats backward in honor of Griffey's trademark style.

2017 Martinez Tribute #11 Batting Practice Jerseys

Like his teammate and fellow Hall of Famer/ Mariners number retiree Ken Griffey, Jr. got a year earlier, Edgar Martinez receives an all-team batting practice tribute on August 12, 2017. Every player wore Edgar's #11 on the Mariners standard batting practice jersey, which for that day, also included a special right sleeve patch to honor his number retirement.

2023 Prototype Home

Soon after Nike took over MLB jersey manufacturing in 2020, they had intended to release their Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template as early as 2022. However, a source told Uni-Watch in 2022 that the plans were “pushed back at least to 2023, and possibly even 2024.” Ultimately, the new template was in fact delayed to 2024, but here we have evidence that prototypes were made up in advance of the 2023 season, if not earlier.

This Mariners home jersey, at first glance, is mostly the same as what they wore before and after the switch in templates, but closer inspection reveals that this is VPE, including the lower MLB logo on back, smaller player name lettering, the band of fabric around the neck opening, a lightweight team patch, and perforated back numbers. The tell-tale “Player” and “23” on back reinforce this as a sample, intended for the 2023 season.

The one item that differs significantly from Mariners home jerseys before and after the switch to VPE is the use of a different color pattern for the name on back lettering. Here it is gray/navy/Mariner green rather than the navy/metallic silver/Mariner green of the on-field jerseys. This may have been an error, or it could have been a new style that Nike or the team wanted to try. Either way, it was not adopted.

The heat-pressed inventory tag also reveals some info, and leaves us with some mysteries. It reads “DH0501 MVR 2023 HOME CONVERSION JERSEY P2.” Here, “MVR” is a code Nike has used elsewhere for the Mariners, and “2023 home” is self explanatory. The “DH0501” indication is not clear, but this may be an internal model number. The use of “Conversion Jersey” and “P2” is also unclear. Other similar jerseys were labeled as “Conversion Jerseys” so it may refer to converting from the Flex Base template to this one, and P2 may mean it is a second iteration of a sample.

2023-2025 Mariners Advertising Patches

Home, home alternate, City Connect

Road blue, alternate teal

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

In 2023, the team replaced their standard logo disc patch with the 2023 All-Star Game patch. The placement of the patch varied depending on the handedness of each player, perhaps in preparation for a sponsor that did not materialize. For 2004, the team disc returned, and it too varied sleeves, despite the team having on sponsor patches.

Finally, prior to the 2025 season, the Mariners struck a deal with Nintendo, a video game company, for a sponsor patch.

The Mariners use two distinct patches. Their home white, alternate home cream and City Connect use an orange rectangle with the Nintendo logo in white. The Road blue and alternate teal jerseys use an orange square with the Nintendo Switch 2 logo in white.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player.

Letter of Professional Opinion/ Document of Restoration

Darrell Johnson (Manager) 1978 Seattle Mariners Road Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: August 23, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0823J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Seattle Mariners Columbia Blue road style pullover jersey with white/gold/blue striped sewn on knit sleeve ends and V-neck collar. "SEATTLE" arched on front in Royal Blue over gold. Player numbers below in the same colors. On back, large player numbers similarly colored with one-color blue name on back above. The jersey has the sleeve patch that was first used as the logo for the 1979 All-Star game sewn to the left sleeve, and was then adopted as a team patch and remained in use afterwards. This patch was surely added when the jersey was re-issued the following year.

Darrell Dean Johnson (August 25, 1928 – May 3, 2004) was an American Major League Baseball catcher, coach, manager and scout. As a manager, he led the 1975 Boston Red Sox to the American League pennant, and was named "Manager of the Year" by both The Sporting News and the Associated Press. Johnson was hired to become the first-ever manager of the expansion Seattle Mariners on September 3, 1976. Johnson skippered the Mariners for approximately three and a half seasons until he was fired on August 3, 1980, and posted an overall win–loss mark of 226–362 (.384).(Wikipedia)

Restoration Performed: As received, the SEATTLE crest on front suffered from most of the thread holding it in place having failed. The jersey wore the numbers 35, and the name "COLEMAN" on back, the back number "5" autographed "Joe Coleman". Coleman was a coach for the Mariners' minor league Spokane Indians 1979-1980, and while it is an assumption, he likely participated in the MLB Mariners' spring training in one or more of those years. Removing the name and number lettering from the back, very clear sets of ghosts were apparent showing sun fading from both the names and numbers of Coleman and Johnson, the Coleman fading much more pronounced suggesting to me it was worn (or displayed) with Coleman on the back longer than it had been worn by Johnson. The jersey fabric is deeper blue below the belt, another typical artifact of sun-bleaching. I removed the gold thread from the front wordmark and replaced it. Using the Mariners team patterns and the light table, I re-created the name and numbers for Johnson, then aged and dyed them prior to sewing in place precisely over the original ghosts. The Coleman ghosts remain slightly visible, even when restored. While tagged as 1978, we left the 1979 patch on the sleeve.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings red-tag style appropriate for 1978, stitched to the bottom left outside of the tail, designating the size as 44 (marked and measured). Two small white flag tabs are pinch-sewn under the right side of the tag; the top one says "Set 1 1978"; the bottom said "1 inch extra length"

Top, as received and prior to restoration. Below, images showing the ghosting after the removal of the Coleman lettering.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in generally good condition with some typical characteristic fading: the front wordmark is original with the stitching touched up, and the front numbers and back are properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no other alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by both Darrell Johnson in 1978 and later Joe Coleman, of the Seattle Mariners.

Seattle Mariners 1980 Stinson Home Jersey

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of an alteration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: Year tagged 1980 Seattle Mariners jersey converted into minor league Wausau Timbers jersey. Original numbers still in place, but front crest had been replaced and NOB missing. Signs of two former NOBs present - Stinson and Edler, both of whom wore #15 on the 1980 Mariners. Original sleeve patch remains. Stitching around numbers front and back had failed in many spots, both colors.

Work Performed: Stripped all lettering. The jersey was filthy as well as well-worn, major glue. Remained from removal of TIMBERS crest. Deep cleaned and laundered, recreated Mariners crest from my original patterns in Royal and gold. Recreated vertically arched name on back from the clearly visible ghosts. Media blasted all new lettering to match the sheen of the old lettering elements. Applied front wordmark and NOB directly over old ghosts. Pulled all thread from the removed numbers and restitched them with new, reapplied them directly over old ghosts.

Seattle Mariners 1980 Beattie Road Jersey

This is not a letter of authenticity. Its purpose is to document the history of an alteration of a jersey in our shop.

As Received: Un-year tagged 1980 Seattle Mariners jersey converted into minor league Wausau Timbers jersey. Original numbers still in place, but front crest had been replaced and NOB missing. Clear ghost of former NOB was present; Jim Beattie, who wore #45 on the 1980 Mariners. Original sleeve patch remains. Gold stitching around back numbers had failed in many spots.

Work Performed: Stripped Wausau crest. Major glue remained behind. Deep cleaned and laundered, recreated Seattle crest from my original patterns in Royal and gold. Recreated radially arched name on back from the clearly visible ghosts. Stitched all blue elements with violet thread in a similar stitch style to the match the faded thread of the original numbers. Applied front wordmark and NOB directly over old ghosts. Pulled only spots of loose thread from the back numbers and restitched them with new only in the spots that the original thread was missing.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Alex Rodriguez 1999 Seattle Mariners Autographed Home Jersey

Examination Date: January 29, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0201J21R

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 1999 Seattle Mariners Russell Athletic size 48 with special tailoring, white six-button-front, full-weight knit home jersey issued to #3, Alex Rodriguez. A single corse of 1/8" Navy soutache borders the placket and circles around the back of the neck. "MARINERS" stitched team wordmark arched in three-color layered twill across both front panels in Navy/Mariner Green/ Metallic Silver. The team's compass logo is embroidered in three colors onto small twill patch that is sewn above the "M". The team's four color compass disk patch is stitched to the left sleeve. On the back, "Rodriguez" is stitched in the proper arch template onto a correctly serged-edge white nameplate. Beneath it is his number, 3 in the proper size and fonts. All the lettering on the back is in Navy Blue outlined with Mariner Green. The jersey is signed on the back left hand side, and a Beckett Letter of Authenticity accompanies the jersey referencing the signature. I have no opinion on the signature.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Russell "R" is embroidered in dark Navy in the end of the right sleeve. The Russell Diamond Collection locker tag, is in the correct style for 1999 and showing the size 48, is stitched to the outside left tail. Beneath it is a white mylar fabric tag with "1999" printed on it, as is correct for Mariners 1999 team-issued jerseys. Layered under the left side of the patch there are a cascade of four overlaid fabric flag tags: 100% Polyester; 2" Extra Length Body, Tapered Body; 1" extra sleeve length. All alterations are evident when examining the jersey and are appropriate for the player and the year compared to other exemplars. The presence of these special tags, plus the notable lack of a size flag tag in the neck are hallmarks of Russell team-issued jerseys vs. ones made for retail sale.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination tells us that all lettering is original without alteration. All elements of the jersey, including the tagging are very crisp, and indicate light use.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered as a Mariners 1999 team-prepared jersey. It is consistent with known exemplars. It appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine team issue as worn by Alex Rodriguez of the Seattle Mariners from the 1999 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Lou Piniella (Manager) Seattle Mariners Game Worn Home Jersey

Examination Date: November 10, 2023 Certification Number: 23-1110J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2001 Seattle Mariners Russell Athletic size 50, white six-button-front, full-weight knit home jersey issued to #14, team manager Lou Piniella. A single corse of 1/8" Navy knit trim borders the placket and circles around the back of the neck. "MARINERS" stitched team wordmark arched in three-color layered twill across both front panels in Navy/Mariner Green/ Metallic Silver. The team's compass logo is embroidered in three colors onto small twill patch that is sewn above the "M". The team's four-color compass disk patch is stitched to the left sleeve. On the back, "Piniella" is stitched using the team's condensed name font (often used for players with names eight letters or more in length) in the proper arch template onto a correctly single-needle serged-edge white nameplate. Beneath it is his number, 14 in the proper size and font. All the lettering on the back is in Navy Blue outlined with Mariner Green. On the center of the back of the neck is stitched a USA flag patch, as added over top the MLB Silhouetted Batter patch, after the events of 9/11 and worn that way through the end of the season. The 2001 All Star patch is stitched to the left sleeve, and the 2001 "100 Seasons" of the American Leagues stitched to the right. I was not able to find other reliably authenticated examples of Piniella jerseys from his post-playing days, but the size is slightly larger than his earlier player jerseys and is reasonable for the manager.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Russell "R" is embroidered in dark Navy in the end of the right sleeve. The Russell Diamond Collection locker tag, is in the correct style for 2000 is stitched to the outside left tail. Beneath it is a white mylar fabric tag with "2000" printed on it, as is correct for Mariners 2000 team-issued jerseys. Pinch-sewn under the left side of the patch is a fabric flag tag: 100% Polyester and the size noted, 50. The presence of these tags, plus the notable lack of a size flag tag in the neck are hallmarks of Russell team-issued jerseys vs. ones made for retail sale.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination tells me that all lettering is original without alteration. All elements of the jersey, including the tagging show softening indicating normal use. There are a couple of stains on the front that could be dirt or tobacco. There are no signs of repair and the jersey is free of contrivance.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered with the correct patches. It is reasonably sized for Piniella and is consistent with known exemplars of other 2001 Mariners jerseys. It shows no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine team issue as worn by manager Lou Piniella of the Seattle Mariners during the 2001 season.

Letter of Authenticity

1995 Ken Griffey Jr. Seattle Mariners Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: June 10, 2020 Certification Number: 200610D1

This letter will serve as the opinion of Sports Investors Authentication LLC regarding the item in review.

Description: 1995 Seattle Mariners Russell Athletic size 46 Northwest Green six-button front full weight knit alternate jersey issued to #24, Ken Griffey, Jr. Everything is correct in this two year, 1995-1996 style alternate Northwest Green jersey (1994 was when it was first introduced but suttle changes took effect the following season). A single corse of 1/8" Navy soutache borders the placket and circles around the back of the neck. "MARINERS" stitched team wordmark arched in two color layered twill across both front panels in Navy/Metallic Silver. The team's compass logo is embroidered in three colors onto small twill patch that is sewn above the "M". The team's four color compass disk patch is stitched to the left sleeve. The 75th anniversary Negro League patch is on the right sleeve. On the back, "GRIFFEY" is stitched in the proper arch template onto a correctly serged-edge nameplate. Beneath it is his number, 24 in the proper size and fonts. All the lettering on the back is in Metallic Silver outlined in Navy tackle twill.

Manufacturer and Team Labeling: The Russell Diamond Collection locker tag, is in the correct style for 1995 and showing the size 46, which is the correct size for Griffey is this stage of his career, is stitched to the outside left tail. Beneath it is a white mylar fabric tag with "1998" printed on it. Layered under the left side of the patch there are two fabric flag tags; 100% Polyester and 2" Extra Length, (both are appropriate for the player and the year.) The presence of these small tags, plus the notable lack of a size flag tag in the neck are hallmarks of Russell team-issued jerseys vs. ones made for retail sale. The Russell "R" is embroidered in dark Navy in the end of the right sleeve.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination tells us that all lettering is original without alteration. Minor puckering and curling of the tags suggest that the jersey was washed a couple times. Jersey is original with no alterations and was removed from use following the end of the 1995 season.

Conclusion: An enormously popular player, Griffey claimed-game worn jerseys are in no short supply and appear in numerous period auctions. Only a very few are offered with provenance, this one is not. The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered as a Mariners 1995 team jersey. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits light game use and wash wear, and appears to have no alterations of any kind. Therefore, it is the considered opinion of Sports Investors Authentication that this jersey is genuine team issue and may have been worn by Ken Griffey Jr. of the Seattle Mariners during the 1995 season.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Ichiro Suzuki 2001 Seattle Mariners Team Issued Home Jersey

Examination Date: December 7, 2021 Certification Number: 21-1207J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2001 Seattle Mariners Russell Athletic size 48 (without special tailoring), Navy Blue six-button-front, full-weight knit jersey lettered for #51, Ichiro Suzuki. A single corse of 1/8" metallic silver soutache borders the placket and circles around the back of the neck. "MARINERS" stitched team wordmark arched in three-color layered twill across both front panels in Metallic silver/Navy/Mariner Green. The team's compass symbol is embroidered in three colors onto small white twill patch that is sewn above the center of the "M". The Mariners All Star Game patch is stitched to the left sleeve, as is correct for this style of jersey in 2001. On the back, in metallic silver outlined with Mariner Green, "ICHIRO" is stitched onto a serged-edge, color matching Navy nameplate. Beneath it is his number, 51 in the proper size and fonts.

Ichiro Suzuki joined the Seattle Mariners in 2001 as one of the most celebrated rookies in MLB history. Already a superstar in Japan, he earned both Rookie of the Year and American League MVP honors in his first MLB season, helping the Mariners to an amazing and record-tying 116 wins and a trip into the postseason.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The small MLB Silhouetted Batter patch in Navy/white/Blue-green is stitched to the back of the neck. The Russell "R" is embroidered in metallic silver thread at the end of the left sleeve. The Russell Diamond Collection locker tag is one of two styles correct for a 2001 issue, stitched to the outside bottom of the left tail. Tagging represents the size as 48, and the jerseys's actual chest measurement matches that tag. Beneath the locker tag is a white mylar fabric tag with "2001" printed on it, and is correct for Mariners 2001 team-issued jerseys. Pinch-sewn under the bottom center of the locker tag and overlapping the team year tag there is a single fabric flag tag that reads "100% Polyester 48", typical of team-spec jerseys.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination tells us that all lettering is original without alteration. All elements of the jersey, are very crisp. The year tag and the size flag tag are slightly wrinkled typical of light use and having been washed; all stitching is tight and intact. The jersey is offered without provenance, and its wear characteristics can not be guaranteed to be from game use.

Conclusion: This jersey is properly tagged and lettered, Its size is consistent with known exemplars worn by the player, careful examination shows it has no alterations of any kind. It shows signs of light wear. It is my considered opinion that this jersey is a genuine pro-model team issue prepared for Ichiro Suzuki of the 2001 Seattle Mariners.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Seattle Mariners 2014 "King" Felix Hernandez Game Worn Navy Alternate Jersey

Examination Date: November 4, 2020 Certification Number: 20-1104J13

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2014 Seattle Mariners Majestic size 52 Navy Blue six-button front, full weight knit alternate jersey issued to #34, Felix Hernandez. All lettering on the jersey is in three-colors; metallic silver/Navy/Mariner Green. "SEATTLE" stitched team wordmark arched in three color layered twill across both front panels. The team's compass logo is embroidered in three colors onto small twill patch that is sewn on top of the "S". In the On the back, "Hernandez" is stitched using the special team alternate jersey font in the proper arch template. Beneath it is his number, 34 in the proper size and font. The Mariners team disk patch is sewn to the left sleeve. The MLB silhouetted batter patch in Navy/white/green is stitched to the center of the back of the neck.

Provenance: The jersey is accompanied by a laminated and unsigned letter from the Mariners merchandising organization, certifying that this is a game worn jersey of Felix Hernandez. The jersey still has its Mariners team store paper hang tag attached to the back of the neck.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Majestic Authentic Collection locker tag, in the correct style for very 2014 is stitched to the outside left tail. Pinched under its bottom hem is a size 52 flag tag. Beneath it is a rectangular white mylar fabric tag with "Property of Seattle Mariners 2014" printed on it. The Majestic twin peaks logo is embroidered in white at the end of the left sleeve. The inside seam tag is coded with #0620, a team-spec code found on team issued jerseys. Notably, it does not have a MLB hologram or serial number attached to it, a feature that seems to be commonplace on game-used Mariners jersey sourced through MLB.com from this time period.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination tells us that all lettering is original without alteration. Some very minor yellowing and fraying of the team and manufacturer tags suggest that the jersey was handled and washed a couple of times.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and numbered for Felix Hernandez and is accompanied by a legitimate-appearing but unsigned and non-serialized letter from the Mariners declaring it as game worn. The Mariners have had a documented practice of moving player-used jerseys through to their team store for sale to fans. In my opinion, it is reasonable to assume that this is a 2014 game worn Seattle Mariners Felix Hernandez jersey.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Seattle Mariners 1977 (Inaugural Season) Spring Training Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: August 30, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0830J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Seattle Mariners 1977-tagged home pullover jersey. Wilson size 42 marked and measured. White body with 1" blue/gold/blue knit trim sewn-in at the ends of the sleeves and around the V-Neck. Mariners crest arched on the front in dark Royal blue outlined with gold. The number 6 in the team's special font is stitched to the left chest and the center of the back, just 5 1/2" from the collar.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Wilson size 42 tag is detached and pinned to the neck as received, covering stitching marks. jersey measures as a 42. This tag accurately reflects the size, is the proper style for use in 1977, and 1977 Mariners jerseys were made by Wilson. To the right of the tag location is a similar sized tan blob of glue residue that extends over the edge of the Wilson tag. On the lower outside left tail is a rectangular swatch of jersey fabric with "77 2" hand chain stitched on it. This tagging does not exactly match game-worn examples in my exemplar library, which use a smaller and thicker-thread/stroke chain stitching, as well as a different nomenclature. Exemplars have player number/two-digit year, while this has two digit year/(assumedly) set number. Other exemplars in my library show this tagging nomenclature used on similar jerseys with high-sewn numbers and no room for a name on back.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows heavy use. A light table evaluation reveals several interesting facts. The numbers on this jersey are original, their fabric showing typical significant puckering greater than the jersey they are attached to. This puckering pattern is impossible to duplicate if numbers are restored. The front MARINERS crest had been removed at some point, and then replaced. I hesitate to call it a restoration because it appears an old, original hand cut script was sewn back onto the jersey. I have seen this before on several 1977 Mariners jerseys, both home and road. A light table evaluation shows that the wordmark "MISSIONS" had been sewn in its place, a 1978 AAA minor league affiliate. However, the wear to the current MARINERS crest is significant with fraying, fading and puckering of the twill, both between the sewn layers of the wordmark and to the jersey fabric that it has been sewn to, and even some splitting of the fabric along the stitch lines. In other words, this appears to be a period wordmark replacement, and the wear to the jersey in its current state indicates that it was used frequently in this state AFTER wordmark replacement, OR an original stripped wordmark was returned the the front of the jersey rather than a new-cut one.

The light table images at left show the ghosts of the MISSIONS wordmark. Above center an example of a 1978 Missions jersey, above right showing the severe puckering under the replaced wordmark indicating heavy use after it was reapplied. Below, regular season jersey tagging is different from the spring training issues.

Observations/Conclusion: This was presented to me as the spring training jersey of catcher Larry Cox. Cox was #6 on the Mariners 1977 roster. At 5' 11" and 190 lbs, a size 42 would have been a tight fit but not impossible. I can find no other exemplars of Cox game worn jerseys to compare it to. 1977 Mariners jerseys are a challenge to authenticate for a couple of reasons. First they are difficult to research, as very little photo documentation exists of this expansion club especially in their first spring training, now some 47 years after the fact. In spring training, teams will traditionally wear the uniforms of the prior year MLB club, but because there was no prior year for the Mariners, a set of uniforms would have had to have been made for them to wear there. This jersey has year/set tagging that is different from other known game worn jerseys from the regular season, and significantly the number on back is too high to have allowed a name to be sewn above it, while the light table reveals that the number is original and that there never was a name sewn there. The very few spring training photos I have unearthed appear to show that the (unique) road uniforms used there ended up in the Mariners minor league system, where they were used without name on back. It is therefore reasonable to assume that the 1977 spring training issue home jerseys were handled the same way. The Mariners had two minor league organizations also called "Mariners" in 1977-78, with the class AAA San Jose Missions added in 1978. With the current wordmark in place it is impossible to see much of the ghosting directly underneath it, I would reasonably conclude that this jersey started life as a 1977 spring training jersey, probably issued to Cox, then may have been used in 1977 minor leagues as a "Mariners" jersey, then was stripped and repurposed as a 1978 "Missions" jersey before being returned to Mariners livery, and perhaps used again in 1979 or later. Teams were frugal, labor was cheap to do the stripping/sewing and there was simply no sense of nostalgia or collectibility for the uniforms used on the field in those days.

Letter of Professional Opinion/Document of Restoration

Pete Ladd 1986 (Tagged 1985) Seattle Mariners 1985 Game Used Road Jersey

Examination Date: November 16, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1116J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description/As Received: Rawlings pullover size 48 gray road jersey (marked and measured), originally Seattle Mariners road jersey, 1985 tagging. Blue V-neck with wide blue/gold/blue trim sewn on the tops of the shoulders. Three color blue/gold/blue numbers "46" on the back and on the left front chest. A light table evaluation shows that the team MARINERS crest had been stripped from the front, as a clear outline of the original stitching remains. Also missing was the player nameplate, leaving behind its own clear outline. In common practice at the time, MLB uniforms were handed down to the team's minor league clubs for reuse in the following years. In 1986-87, the Mariners had five minor league franchises, but with only one of them named "Mariners" MLB hand-me-downs either had to be stripped of the big-league team wordmark or had it covered up with a plate. Both methods were used by the teams. Experience shows that that typically at the end of the season, all uniforms that were sent down were stripped of team crests and player nameplates in bulk so they could be re-lettered and issued to minor league players the next year. This particular jersey was stripped but was never reused, as it stayed blank without a team name added to it. My experience has shown that this is a more typical occurrence with larger-sized jerseys that are less likely fit the younger players in the minors.

6' 3" 240lb. Pitcher Pete Lad, nicknamed "Bigfoot", appeared in 52 games, all in relief, during the full season, 1986 for the Mariners, compiling an 8-6 record with 6 saves and compiling a 3.82 ERA. Ladd's six-year MLB career ended after the 1986 season, and he played his final season of 1987 for the MiLB Albuquerque Dukes.

Restoration Performed: While #46 was issued in 1985 to 2 different pitchers, Mike Stanton and Jack Lazorko, the odd thing is is that the obvious ghost from the name on back nameplate is far too short for either of those two names. But it is the correct nameplate length for pitcher Pete Ladd who wore number 46 in 1986. Therefore, I doubt this jersey was worn in 1985, because there is really no remaining mark from a longer nameplate, and the light table confirms there was not another nameplate on this. My conclusion is that this was a leftover 1985 jersey that was issued to Ladd in 1986 when the team was still wearing the same style. My team template for the three color Mariners crest matched the ghost on the front of this jersey exactly, so it was cut from the correct Varsity Royal and gold twill and was sewn exactly over the old marks. "LADD" was cut in the same shade of blue using the proper 1985-86 font and stitched to a laser-cut nameplate that exactly covered the old ghost. There are no team repairs and the jersey remains in very good condition. Mariners jerseys of this vintage are seldom seen in original condition because of the team's practice of stripping then re-lettering them for reissue, but because this one never had anything else stitched on it before its restoration, it presents better than any other restored similar-era Mariners jersey that I have evaluated.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Rawlings red tagging correct for 1985-86 is stitched to the outside left tail. Pinch-sewn under its right border is a small flag tab that reads SET 1 1985. This tagging matches exemplars.

Top: as received. The front numbers were originally sewn crooked, as seen. Below: Light table images below show the ghosts of the front Mariners wordmark, removed but never modified further with a minor league crest. Ghost of the original nameplate on the back can also be seen clearly on the light table. The replacement plate was made to exactly cover the old mark.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is in very good condition: with original player numbers, and with team wordmark and player nameplate properly restored with lettering near-identical to original. The jersey has no alterations or contrivances of of any kind. It has a team-issue tagging. It is my considered opinion that this jersey was made to team specifications and worn by Pete Ladd of the 1986 Seattle Mariners.

Chapter 23

Miami Marlins

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025, Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Back

Marlins Uniform History Notes

- The Marlins were added to the National League as an expansion team in 1993. Their flashy inaugural uniforms simply scream “1990s” with their combination of teal pinstripes and teal and black lettering, teal undershirts, teal bating jerseys, and even teal caps.
- The team was born after a long period of acrimonious negotiation with the city of Miami, and in the end, the lack of agreement on several terms—including the promise of a proper stadium—caused the team to call itself the “Florida” Marlins instead of “Miami Marlins.” Road uniforms were adorned with Florida wordmarks. Sleeve patches and caps and logos featured the jumping fish and an “F.”
- Notably, the Marlins introduced an alternate home vest as a part of their uniform lineup. In 1993, the Reds also introduced a vest to be worn as their primary home uniform jersey. They became the first teams to wear vests in 23 years, last worn by the Pirates during the first half of the 1970 season.
- Within the first couple of years, teal starts to be replaced by black in the Marlins’ wardrobe—first undershirts, then caps, then BP jerseys.
- A minor redesign in 2003 switches even more team elements from teal to black, as pinstripes and the main color of lettering in team wordmarks switch to black as well. A black alternate jersey is introduced, and metallic silver starts to be used on all elements—wordmarks, player numbers, and logos. The Marlins develop a preference for their black alternate jerseys, wearing them frequently at home and on the road. The pinstriped vest is dropped for 2003, and is replaced by an alternate pinstriped sleeved jersey with the Fish/F logo design on its left chest; the same logo is used on the cap.
- The black twill used by the team is metallic, and authentic Marlins jerseys are noticeably heavy, with four layers of twill lettering. The fronts and backs are sharp and stiff as well, because the metallic twill is thick, with almost razor-sharp edges and points. The many layers are inflexible to bend. The pointy edges of the front lettering—especially the metallic layers—rub on the sleeves like sandpaper when players move their arms. Game-worn jerseys often exhibit pulls and pilling on the insides of the sleeves from this contact.
- In 2010–2011, negotiations between the city of Miami and the team improve, and the prospects for a new stadium grow from glimmer to reality. In what is likely a political move, the team quietly drops the word “Florida” from its uniforms, removes the Fish/F patch from the sleeves, and retires the alternate Fish/F jersey. The “FLORIDA” wordmark on the road uniform is replaced by the “MARLINS” home wordmark. The only place the Fish/F logo remains is on team caps.
- Concurrent with the 2012 opening of “Marlins Park,” their new stadium, the team does a complete redesign that changes everything, including the team name (Miami Marlins, at last) its logos, wordmarks, and colors. Teal is left behind as a relic of the 1990s when it was originally so popular.
- The new uniforms are certainly different, featuring white, black, and red-orange as main colors, and turquoise and yellow as accent colors. The team logo changes from an “F” (Florida) to “M” (Miami). A Marlins-specific number font includes a drop shadow that frankly doesn’t work well on any uniform except the black one, and uses a player number font that is bolder than the standard block font used by most teams. Names and numbers are three-color.
- By 2019, under the direction of a new ownership group, the Marlins do another complete redesign, simplifying their uniforms to the point that all three jerseys have the same neon color lettering regardless of jersey color. While the home and road jerseys still say “Miami” on front in a new script, the black alternate jersey now has “Marlins” on front.
- In 2023, a 1993–2002 style throwback jersey is worn frequently, usually on home Fridays, celebrating the club’s 30th anniversary.
- In 2024, a light blue alternate is added to the lineup, stylized on the team’s Spring Training/batting practice jersey it started wearing in 2020. The legibility issues on the black alternate are also resolved, by “filling in” the hollow wordmark, numbers, and name on back.
- 2021 brings a City Connect uniform, drawing inspiration from the beloved minor league Cuban Sugar Kings. The vivid red jersey featured a front script reading “Miami” in white with teal trim, paying tribute to the city’s Cuban-American heritage. It included sleeve striping and a commemorative “Sugar Kings” sleeve patch, combining 1950s aesthetics with modern flair. The jersey quickly becomes a fan favorite and represents one of the bolder City Connect entries, before being retired after 2024.
- The 2024 City Connect 2.0 version introduces a bold new look with a black base and electric neon trim, evoking the visual energy of Miami nightlife and the city’s famed art deco palette. With vivid pink, blue, and yellow accents, the uniform leans heavily into modern streetwear and digital culture aesthetics.

1993-2002 Alternate Home Vest

- The Marlins and the Reds brought the vest jersey back to Major League Baseball in 1993—the first vests of the double knit era.
- Lettering format is identical to home jersey with sleeves. Nameplate used 1993–2001; no nameplate in 2002.
- Some 1993 jerseys are year tagged and some are not. After 1993 there is no team year tagging.
- The vest was worn with a teal or black undershirt. The teal undershirt was worn more often in the first few years, the black one in the next few. 1998–2002, they seem to have worn it exclusively with black undershirts; however, both colors are considered correct for all years.
- The undershirt was properly adorned with all of the team patches appropriate for the year.

1994 Team Undershirt for Vest

The sleeved shirt worn under a team vest jersey is an important part of the uniform. But finding legitimate, team issued undershirts decades after they were made is often difficult.

Modern players frequently disregard team uniform guidelines for undershirts—and many teams decide not to push the issue. Some are happy simply if players wear undershirts of the proper color. One way that teams get around the resistance is by using "faux" vests: white-bodied jerseys with colored sleeves sewn in. Several teams, including the Blue Jays and the White Sox, have tried this after wearing actual vests first.

This garment is advertised as an original Marlins 1994 undershirt with the MLB 125th Anniversary patch on the sleeve, and the team logo at the crew neck. Amapro was an authorized "Diamond Collection" undershirt provider to MLB briefly in the early 1990s before the contract went to Russell.

2010-2011 Road

When the Marlins joined MLB in 1993, they adopted the name of their state, rather than their city—publicly saying that team loyalty was intended to include all residents of the state, which had been without a MLB team until that date. But in reality, the team had been unable to come to terms with the city of Miami for a long-term plan to build a stadium, and in corporate retaliation of sorts, the team decided not to adopt the name of its home city. By 2010, the city of Miami and the team had come to an agreement on a stadium, and not coincidentally, the team made a subtle change to its road uniforms, finally removing the "Florida" script from the front and replacing it with the Marlins wordmark found on their home uniforms.

The "F/Fish" patch, which was the team's secondary logo, disappeared as sleeve patches after 2009; the F/Fish pinstriped alternate jersey was retired in 2010 as well. The only place the F/Fish still appeared was on the team's caps.

In 2012 the team would finally be rechristened as the Miami Marlins.

- With their full team redesign for 2012, the Marlins join only the 2012 Texas Rangers in using name of their locale and not their team name on their primary home jersey.
- Jerseys feature a bold, multicolored wordmark with stylized jumping fish; large team logo “M” patch on left sleeve.
- Numbers are in a new Marlins-specific font in three colors: black/orange 3D drop shadow/ metallic silver. Player names on back in a Marlins-specific variant of Block: black/metallic silver.
- White Cool Base jersey features narrow orange knit trim at the collar and near sleeve ends.

“Billy the Marlin,” the team’s ridiculous mascot, gains a bunch of rainbow colors on his fin and “uniform” pants, concurrent with the team redesign.

2012-2018 Road

- The Marlins' gray road jersey is of the same design as the team's home jersey, with the exception of colors being switched around.
- The "Miami" wordmark on front has white as its primary color and metallic silver as an outline color, nearly opposite of the home white jersey.
- "M" sleeve patch follows the same pattern: white with rainbow highlights.
- Player numbers on back are in special new Marlins font: black, orange 3D drop shadow, and silver.
- Player names are in Marlins version of Block: black, outlined with metallic silver.

2012-2018 Alternate Black

The Marlins have a strong preference for wearing the alternate black jersey at home and seemingly as their default road uniform. Front wordmark and left sleeve team patch are identical to the ones used on the gray road jersey, featuring predominately white lettering outlined in metallic silver. White names on back in special Marlins variant of Block, outlined in metallic silver. Back numbers are orange/black 3D drop shadow/silver. This color combination is the only one where one can see the intended drop shadow effect of the lettering.

2012, 2015-2017* Alternate Home Orange/ 2013-2014 Alternate Orange

*While this style jersey appears in the team style guide as a valid uniform choice for 2018, there is no evidence that they were ever team-issued or worn in 2018.

"Nothing came easily during the process, and picking the "reddish orange" tone to represent a Florida sunset took nearly three months. While being careful to avoid the orange tones used by the New York Mets, Baltimore Orioles, Detroit Tigers and San Francisco Giants, after some back and forth, the color selected was in the Pantone color system ("warm red"). Still, it was not on MLB's uniform color palette, which meant even more months of back and forth with various baseball licensees and their suppliers… Thread samples sometimes took more than a month to produce, making it a difficult, and slow, exercise."

The Marlins alternate orange jersey is the only one in the team set that features the team's nickname instead of the city name. Black/bright blue 3D drop shadow/metallic silver numbers on back; black/metallic silver name on back. White "M" patch on sleeve.

Right: The Marlins word-mark lettering is not layered twill like most teams'; each letter is a multicolored, embroidered applique that is then sewn to the jersey with metal-lic silver thread. This technique is used for all colors of jerseys, as well as the batting practice jersey.

2016: Flex Base Jersey Construction and Branding

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

In 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" jerseys, which are made from Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic states is 10-20% lighter than traditional layered twill. The MLB logo on the back of the neck is now a rubberized patch (called CFX by Majestic) and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from Cool Base jerseys of old.

The Marlins completely redesign their logos and uniforms, creating a third phase of uniform history in their 26th year. Though still ornate, the new home jerseys are simpler than the last set, ridding it of rainbow coloring and metallic twill. Here, the white Majestic Flex Base jersey features red/blue/black braid around each sleeve end, with the team's new Marlin and Ball logo in the same colors on the left sleeve. Front "Miami" script wordmark (which according to the team is based on the original Miami Marlins and the Havana Sugar Kings, former professional clubs that played in the 1950s) and the custom-font back numbers are black/blue/red drop shadow, with the shadow dropping down to the left. Names on back are black/blue. With black as the main color in the lettering, the other two twill colors recede somewhat, despite their brightness individually, bringing a subtlety that the last set lacked. Majestic makes these in 2019, Nike takes over starting in 2020.

2019-2023 Road

Ever hear a song where the first verse is the same as the second verse? The Marlins 2019 road jersey is the uniform version of that, so to speak. It is, in fact, identical to the white Majestic Flex Base home jersey except that the fabric is gray rather than white. Otherwise, all of the same info applies. Red/blue/black braid encircles each sleeve end, with the team's new Marlin and Ball logo in the same colors on the left sleeve. Front “Miami” script wordmark (which according to the team is based on the original Miami Marlins and the Havana Sugar Kings, former professional clubs that played in the 1950s) and custom-font back numbers are black/blue/red drop shadow, with the shadow dropping down to the left. Names on back are black/blue. With black as the main color in the lettering, the other two twill colors recede somewhat, though not as much as on the home jersey, bringing a subtlety that the last set lacked. Majestic makes these in 2019, Nike takes over starting in 2020.

Bill Henderson Collection

2019

The seemingly-obligatory black Marlins alternate is redesigned for 2019, bringing the team name back to a Marlins jersey for the first time since 2011. And otherwise brings exactly the same specs as the home and road jerseys layered on a black Majestic Flex Base template. Red/blue/black braid encircles each sleeve end (the black part of the braid is invisible against the black jersey), with the team's new Marlin and Ball logo in the same colors (and mostly invisible) on the left sleeve. Front “Marlins” script wordmark and custom-font back numbers are black/blue/red drop shadow, with the shadow dropping down to the left. Names on back are black/blue. Here, the black-dominant lettering literally disappears into the jersey color, leaving the otherwise secondary colors to take over, creating an unusual, hard to see backlit-neon-shadow presentation. Nike replaces Majestic as manufacturer in 2020.

2021-2023 City Connect

Stephen Kraljic Collection

For their entry into the City Connect program, the Marlins pay tribute to an historic Cuban ball club in a way that is decidedly Miami. The Marlins call their City Connect jerseys "a modern remix of the iconic uniforms of the Cuban Sugar Kings, connecting the historic look with a refreshed style emblematic of our city." The Havana Sugar Kings played from 1954–1960, and were among the earliest clubs to field a team of players from across Latin America as well as African Americans. The team ultimately moved to Jacksonville, Florida, and the franchise eventually became the Marlins Triple-A affiliate, the Jacksonville Jumbo Shrimp. The jersey is bright red with wide white pinstripes on the body inly, not the sleeves. "Miami" is across the front in white/teal 3D drop shadow in a font that emulates the script on the Sugar Kings' uniforms (which were white with red stripes). Player names are white/teal and numbers are Varsity in white/teal 3D drop shadow. The left sleeve sports a Marlins logo patch while the right sleeve features a patch based on the Sugar Kings' own. In 2023, a sponsor patch replaced the Marlins patch, and patch locations differed based on player handedness. The "Sugar Kings" script is embroidered in teal/white above the jock tag. In 2023, the style code for this jersey changes from MMCR to O3VR.

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020–2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys with all teams switching from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template, the jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one and done” season of changes that brought intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolled back some but not all of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys had changed from earlier versions in several key ways.

- VPE home jerseys are off-white, or light cream color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now “sewn-in” to the jersey at the seams. Placket trim adornment remains the same, though the trim is now spaced closer together with the narrowing in placket size.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower onto the back, down from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply always a reduced size of the back numbers. This was not the way it had been in the past for most teams, with front numbers being a font variant (smaller but usually wider and bolder) than the back font.
- Team logo sleeve patches, and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or to sublimated cloth/twill
- All lettering is done using a new more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Marlins' five-year-old home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the team's front lettering now splits the "a" across the placket rather than splitting between the "i" and "a" as before. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn into the sleeve rather than on to it, which makes it visibly wider. The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

2024 Alternate Black

Stephen Kraljic Collection

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Marlins' five-year-old road jersey. But the biggest and most welcome change is not a result of the new template - the new colors for all of the jersey's lettering. When the jersey was introduced, the lettering was primarily black, which disappeared into the black jersey, even with the other layers. Now, all of the black has been replaced with white, so the front "Marlins" script wordmark and custom-font back numbers are white/blue/red drop shadow, with the shadow dropping down to the left. Names on back are now white/blue.

The changes from the VPE template include the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the team's front lettering now splits the "r" further to the left than before. Sleeve-end trim is now sewn into the sleeve rather than on to it, which makes it visibly wider. The trim color is different as well, formerly black/blue/red, with the black disappearing into the jersey, the new trim is just blue/red, deleting the area of black that couldn't be seen anyhow. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys in 2024.

2024 Alternate Home Blue

Along with the updates to their black alternate, the Marlins introduce a new alternate in 2024. Evolving from their former batting practice jersey, the new blue alternate simply swaps out the “M” cap logo of the BP with the “Marlins” lettering of their black alternate. Front lettering and back numbers are black/white/red drop shadow, player names are black/white. Compared to the BP, the back name and numbers are smaller, with the name arching more radically, consistent with other Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) jerseys. With VPE, sleeve-end trim is now sewn into the sleeve rather than on to it, which makes it visibly wider than the BP jersey. The trim changes from black/blue/red to black/red/blue. The team uses perforated numbers on these jerseys.

2024 City Connect

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Marlins' City Connect jersey that was introduced three seasons prior. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. The team sleeve patch appears to be printed now rather than embroidered. Otherwise, because this jersey has no trim on the neck, sleeves, or placket, it appears mostly the same as before. One minor change that isn't visible on-field - the "Sugar Kings" lettering above the jock tag is now heat pressed instead of embroidered as before. The Marlins use perforated numbers on this version of the jersey.

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. Note that this jersey also uses Nike's new-for-2025 white jock tag, seen at right. A handful of jerseys across the league use this new tag.

2025 Road

The 2025 season brings many changes to road gray jerseys across MLB. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys suffered from significant sweat-staining issues during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn on to jerseys again rather than sewn in. Back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Unless a team has contrasting trim that encircles the collar opening, the superfluous, jersey-colored set-in band of trim (which was largely invisible) is also deleted. VPE’s placket remains narrow, so the “Marlins” lettering breaks in the same place as in 2024. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches.

2025 City Connect 2.0

The Marlins introduce their City Connect 2.0 in 2025, and according to their press release (excerpts of which are reproduced below), the jerseys honor the past and present of Miami and its baseball team.

Colors: Teal represents the past of the inaugural 1993 team. Pink accents are like the bright lights in the city's skyline.

Wordmark: The "Miami" wordmark is like a time traveler, channeling classic elegance reminiscent of the Florida Marlins with lettering as energetic as the city's roots.

Horizontal pinstripes: A fresh take on the pinstripes that captures the essence of South Florida, blending tradition with a contemporary edge.

Jock tag: From the beaches to the ballpark, the Marlins celebrate the Sunshine State. It embraces the history, celebrates today and looks to build a legacy for tomorrow.

"MIA 305" is also heat-pressed into the collar, a reference to the city's airport code and area code.

1994-1998 Batting Practice/ 1999-2002 Home Batting Practice

Same as the 1993 jersey but switched around logo colors: Teal mesh, with black/gray/white Marlins script. White/teal/black sleeve trim. Names on back two-color black/gray, on nameplate. All examples of team issued jerseys in my files of this style seem to be made by Majestic. Back numbers three color: black/gray/white. Team patch used on left sleeve.

1994-1999 Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck #1

- Some players wear this alternate Majestic Gamewarmer zip-necked batting practice jersey occasionally in the late 1990s
- The jersey follows the color scheme of the then-current standard BP jersey, but it has twin sets of white/black/white bands sewn into the team neck trim and sleeve end trim elastic.
- Three-color Block numbers on back: black/silver/white. Names on nameplates are two-color: black and white.

1994 Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck #2

Although this style of zip-neck jersey was seemingly offered by Majestic to every team, only a few teams actively used them; fewer still numbered them for players. The Marlins used these jerseys more than most, and this one has the 1994 MLB 125th Anniversary patch on the sleeve.

I am assuming these jerseys were team issued, though I have yet to find photos of team members wearing this style on the field.

2000-2002 Road Batting Practice

Black mesh fabric, teal/black/gray front lettering, knit sleeve ends in white/teal/black. Three-color numbers on back only: teal/black/white. Exact year of first use is not confirmed. Pre-2000 versions have no Silhouetted Batter patch at the back of the neck. Names on back; nameplates are used; names are three-color: teal/black/white.

Bottom right: We've included this style in every edition of this guide, previously. Black mesh BP, pre-2000 as they lack batterman patch on neck. Teal/black/white back numbers and front crest. Many exist, however, I am now almost certain that these are minor league issue; while I have one in my personal collection and many of these photos in my archives, all are missing nameplates and they show excessive wear typical of minor league issue. I have been unable to locate a single photo of the MLB Marlins wearing these, even in spring training. Any reader assistance would be welcome.

2003-2006 Batting Practice

A surprisingly plain design for a team that is typically so colorful.

Simple three-color white/black/metallic silver numbers and name; black jersey with narrow white piping sewn-in along the sleeve tops. The only hint of color is the green on the Silhouetted Batter patch on the back of the neck.

2007-2010 Batting Practice

Marlins redesigned Cool Base batting practice jerseys for 2007 remain a simple, solid black with white/black/gray lettering, names, and numbers. A white/black panel is sewn into the side for contrast. Team wordmark is now a heat-applied design, and not sewn tackle twill.

The official MLB Style Guide shows a separate and different Marlins road style BP jersey for 2007–2010: one with gray side panels, to be used with road gray pants (like the Blue Jays had done). However my photo research shows the white panel home jerseys always being used, regardless of the pants worn. I have never seen a gray-sided one, and strongly suspect that they were never made.

2011 Batting Practice

MLB switched all teams to button-front batting practice jerseys for 2011, and the Marlins made the change, simultaneously dropping the listed gray-side-paneled road batting practice jersey that was listed in the official catalog but unseen 2007–2010.

All lettering is multi-layer tackle twill, white/black/silver. This is a one-year style, as the team changed its identity branding in 2012.

© GameWornGuides.com

2012-2013 Batting Practice

A new button-front black batting practice jersey with orange side panels accompanies the Marlins' 2012 makeover. All lettering replicates that of the black alternate jersey. Names on back are layered twill white/metallic silver; numbers in orange/black 3D drop shadow/silver/twill.

2014-2016 Batting Practice

With the all-MLB BP jersey refresh for 2014, the Marlins opt to make a major change to theirs, removing the full front team name and replacing it with the club's sleeve logo on the left chest. Narrow black knit trim on the sleeve ends and neck opening is bisected with an orange stripe. Orange side panels continue, but now stop before the bottom of the jersey. On the back, names continue in a Marlins Block variant in white/metallic silver. Fancy numbers are three-color orange/black 3D drop shadow/metallic silver.

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

For the first time in 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training jersey, intended to be worn for workouts and games in the preseason. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill, decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols, as the main twill layer for every team. The Marlins use their regular season black alternate as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The back numbers are orange patterned twill/black 3D drop shadow/metallic silver. The name on back is white patterned twill/metallic silver. The jersey also features a rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate Highway sign, reading "2016" and "FL" representing where the Marlins spend Spring Training.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training jerseys return for all teams in 2017, with some minor design modifications. As in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template, and features special printed twill decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill in single-color white with gray printing, replacing the many team-specific combinations from 2016. The Marlins again use their regular season black alternate as a basis for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are white patterned twill. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve in the style of an Interstate Highway sign, reading “2017” and “FL” representing where the Marlins spend Spring Training. The Jose Fernandez 16 memorial patch appears on the left chest, as it does for all 2017 Marlins jerseys.

2017-2018 Batting Practice

New for 2017: With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets that are void of player identification instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. Official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve BP Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but is made from Cool Base jersey material. The underarm and back panels are of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. The lettering is in what Majestic calls “lightweight twill” (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Marlins jersey is black with orange back and underarm gussets. The "M" logo, also seen on their caps and regular jersey patches, appears on the front left chest. The back of the jersey is blank. Player number in orange/black 3D drop shadow/metallic silver in the Marlins special font on the left sleeve.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Spring Training

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design theme of the previous year, again featuring all player name and number lettering using each team's regular fonts using only one layer of twill printed with special Spring Training and 2018-year-specific patterns. The Marlins use their orange alternate (though not worn in the regular-season this year) as their base. The name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. A new CFX patch, shaped like home plate, is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "FL" representing their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the theme of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, yet without 2016's printed patterns. The Marlins use a design separate from their regular season standard set, though worn as a batting practice jersey at times, carrying a new CFX patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "FLA," referencing their Spring Training home. The back numbers are black/white/red drop shadow. The name on back is black/white. This style is also worn as a BP jersey in the regular season, without the Spring Training patch.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Spring Training

Spring Training is simplified for 2020, league-wide. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the special sleeve patch indicating the year and location of a team's Spring Training home, and now the lettering is the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as the teams would wear in the regular season, making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates. For 2020, the Marlins use a design separate from their regular-season standard set, but one worn as a batting practice jersey at times during the season, with black/white/red drop shadow back numbers. The name on back is black/white.

1999 Turn Ahead the Clock

1999 Turn Ahead the Clock jersey, worn once in a July 23 game against the Brewers.

Worn with a teal undershirt. Name and number on the back are sewn in silver metallic outlined with teal, using “Computer” OCR type style for names and numbers.

Most teams gave these jerseys to the players who wore them in the game, so finding a game used one is an uncommon occurrence.

Existing as an MLB team since only 1993, the Marlins refused to be excluded from the Turn Back the Clock fun. They dressed as the minor league Miami Marlins of the Florida State League in home and road contests during 2002. These 1982-style double knit jerseys are made by Mitchell & Ness. Back-to-back road games were played wearing these, July 15–16, 2002 in New York vs. the 1982-attired Mets.

2007 Turn Back the Clock to 1997

On June 14, 2007, the Marlins played the Cleveland Indians in an interleague Turn Back the Clock game, reprising the 1997 World Series between the two teams. The Marlins wore Majestic-made teal pinstripe vests for the event. The Indians did not need to wear retro; they were still wearing the same uniforms as they did a mere 10 years prior.

The Marlins wore black undershirts with the round team patch from 1997 on it as well. I wonder how many game attendees noticed that the Marlins were wearing “Throwback” uniforms?

MLB decreed that all teams would wear camouflage-lettered jerseys for Memorial Day, May 27, 2013. The Marlins altered their road jerseys in response. Front wordmark is visible, thanks to a black outline. Back lettering in camo/orange 3D drop shadow/ white all but disappears into the background of gray—as is the specific job of camouflage—and the main reason it is not used for high-visibility applications such as team uniform lettering.

2013 Turn Back the Clock to 1956 Int'l League Miami Marlins

July 20, 2013: As the guests in Milwaukee for the Brewers' Turn Back the Clock game, the Marlins dressed as their namesake Miami Marlins, a minor league International League affiliate of the Philadelphia Phillies in 1956. Satchel Paige pitched for them 1956-1959, and the throwback uniforms have a #29 patch on the sleeve to honor him.

These uniforms were made by Ebbetts Field Flannels. Lettering is orange and royal blue twill. Orange knit trim is at sleeve ends; royal blue on the placket.

2014 Turn Back the Clock to 1949 FIL Miami Sun Sox

June 8, 2014: The Marlins visited the Cubs for their Turn Back the Clock to 1942 day, and since there was no MLB team in Miami in 1942, the Marlins dressed as the 1949 minor league Miami Sun Sox of the Florida International League in gray knit replica uniforms by Majestic. The Sun Sox were an affiliate of the Brooklyn Dodgers.

2015 Memorial Day

The Marlins are on the road again for Memorial Day, May 25, 2015, and once again use their road gray jerseys as the base, as they did in 2013. This year, however, they opt for a new lettering style. Front wordmark is desert camo, outlined in orange and silver; names on back are camo/orange, and back numbers are camo/black 3D drop shadow/orange. The layer of black helps the back numbers considerably, but the front and back letters are still hard to read. In 2015, the MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/white, rather than its typical colors from 2014.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue, regardless of what the team's normal color palette might be. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as the team's regular jerseys, making the black knit trim clash somewhat with the red and blue decoration. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar. The Marlins wear their road gray jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars, outlined in red for their back numbers.

The Marlins wordmark on front is in the blue-background twill, surrounded by thick red and silver embroidery, mimicking their typical jersey lettering construction but removing the complex shadow embroidery. This setup makes the Marlins one of a few teams (along with the Cubs and Reds) to have more than two colors on their front logo for this promotion. Player names on back are in red. Two-layer twill replaces the usual, complex multicolor lettering on the jerseys, and all drop shadows are eliminated. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

2016-2017 Mother's Day

All teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms for Mother's Day, May 8, 2016 and May 13-14, 2017. All jerseys are of Flex Base™ construction, with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days); the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink; and the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark pink/light pink/white. The Marlins wear their home white jerseys, and the typically multicolor front lettering is rendered in pink with dark gray/silver outlines. The player names on back are dark gray; back numbers are pink/dark gray without the standard drop shadow. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally black, becomes dark gray. In 2017, it is worn with the Jose Fernandez memorial on the right sleeve.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at back neck becomes black and dark gold for all teams. The new, league-wide template, with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines, makes this set more legible than in prior years. The Marlins apply the camouflage trimmings to their home white jerseys for the game on May 30. The typical multicolor front lettering and back numbers are rendered in three-color woodland camo/black/white on front, and two-color camo/black (minus 3D drop shadows) on back numbers, and player names appear in single-color black. The intricate multi-color beveling on the front logo is also removed. Like other teams, their sleeve patches are reduced to shades of green, gray, and black, and trim elements are also changed to single-color black from the usual orange.

2016 Father's Day

For the first time in 2016, all teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms Father's Day, Sunday, June 19. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction, with the rubberized front tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days); the back of the collar MLB Silhouetted Batter patch appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white. The Marlins wear their home white jerseys, and the typical multicolor front lettering is rendered in light blue/dark gray/silver. The player names on back are rendered in dark gray; front and back numbers are light blue/dark gray without the typical complex drop shadows. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally black, becomes dark gray.

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another new Independence Day jersey template for 2016, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each Independence Day jersey has a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB appliqué sewn on the back of the neck. The Marlins are on the road and wear their road jerseys. All clubs have a choice of two styles of star-spangled lettering twill, and the Marlins select the blue twill version with red and gray outlines to replace their typical multicolor front lettering, removing the intricate beveling in the process. The back numbers (here with no 3D drop shadow) are replaced with special blue star twill/red, and the player names on back are red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. New for 2016: team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue, replacing team colors, and all jersey trim, normally black, becomes blue. The Marlins wear this same jersey on July 3 for a game against the Braves at Ft. Bragg, and include a left-chest Fort Bragg patch for that game, which is not carried over to Independence Day.

2017 Memorial Day

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses the team fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two adjacent dark colors are very difficult to tell apart, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, while the back-of-collar MLB logo and team patches switch to an olive green and black treatment. A green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the U.S. military, appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are also simplified to single-color black. The Marlins apply this style to their home white jerseys as worn on May 27–29, 2017. The Jose Fernandez “16” memorial patch is on left chest.

2017 Father's Day

Light blue-trimmed Father's Day jerseys return on June 17–18, 2017. Once again, the Flex Base jerseys have the usual front left tail Majestic tagging and set tagging at the inside bottom of the placket. Returning as well is the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon glued on left chest, the light blue Majestic embroidered sleeve logo, and the dark royal blue/light blue/white back collar ChromaFlex MLB Silhouetted Batter patch. The Marlins wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in light blue/dark gray. The player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while back numbers are light blue/dark gray. All jersey trim, normally black, becomes dark gray. The team's sleeve patch is also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white. The Jose Fernandez "16" memorial patch is on left sleeve.

2017 Independence Day

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill—appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 14, 2017, the Marlins wear their road gray jersey with red patterned twill/blue front logo lettering and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color blue. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color blue. The Jose Fernandez "16" memorial patch is on left chest.

2017-2018 Players Weekend

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team-standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017 and August 24–26, 2018, the Marlins wear jerseys with teal bodies and orange sleeves with white nicknames and orange numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide orange/white/orange trim. The front features a simplified version of their home wordmark, rendered with embroidered outline and jumping fish graphic, here rendered in orange/black kiss-cut lightweight twill. The 2017 version has the Jose Fernandez "16" memorial patch on left chest.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Memorial Day

The 2018 Memorial Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017, with dark olive green/black front lettering and numbers joined by solid-color black player names on back. The outlines are nearly impossible to see as the two colors are so close in hue to each other. The back-of-collar MLB logo and team-specific sleeve patches also are repeated from 2017 with an olive green and black treatment. Trim elements are simplified to single-color white, and an all but invisible green bar patch with five black stars, representing the five branches of the US military, is stitched to the right sleeve. The Marlins apply this style to their black alternate jerseys on May 26–28, 2018.

2018 Turn Back the Clock to 1993

The Marlins mark their 25th anniversary with a throwback to their 1993 inaugural home jerseys on June 8–10, 2018. Striking for the early 1990s, but soporific compared to Marlins uniforms that followed, this teal pinstriped jersey is reproduced in full knit by Majestic. Aside from the anachronistic addition of the team's 25th anniversary patch on the right sleeve in place of an inaugural patch worn in 1993, these are nearly indistinguishable from the originals. Front logo appears in teal/black/white, with black/teal player names (on proper plates) and black/white/teal on front and back numbers. The Marlins' original logo properly appears on the left sleeve, as it did when the team took the field at home for the first time. An excellent throwback effort though nothing less should be expected when only 25 years have elapsed.

© GameWornGuides.com

2018 Independence Day

The 2018 Independence Day jerseys repeat the pattern of 2017 featuring printed twill with a pattern of stars and stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two different color options for the lettering—red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging, and a ChromaFlex rubberized “stars and stripes” pattern MLB patch is sewn on the back of the neck.

On July 2–4, 2018, the Marlins wear their home white jerseys with red patterned twill/blue front logo lettering and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color blue. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue. All jersey trim is single-color red.

2019 Turn Back the Clock to 1993

Apparently, the Marlins (or their fans) loved the teal so much from their 2018 throwback weekend that it resurfaces again July 26–28, 2019, this time mimicking the alternate vest version of the jersey used in 2018. And like that entry, this one is spot on in terms of accuracy as well. Rendered here by Majestic in full knit, this throwback commemorates the jersey that brought vests back to MLB in 1993 (along with the Reds the same year).

Minus sleeves, it is identical to the standard home jersey of the era—front logo appears in teal/black/white, with black/teal player names (on proper plates) and black/white/teal on front and back numbers. It was originally worn with a teal undershirt in the early '90s, but here appears with black, though the team's original logo patch is reproduced on the undershirt sleeves as it was in 1993.

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its ear, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white, with all team sleeve patches and trim removed, leaving a clean but stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and special patches with messages of inspiration. MLB says that this new approach is to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear the players choose for the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019.

Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. Back-of-collar CFX MLB logo is now silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs, a white “45” in a black circle, on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys. The Marlins wear a white version of their home jersey with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in white/gray with gray nickname on back.

2020 Negro Leagues Tribute (1920s Miami Giants)

Stephen Kraljic Collection

When the 100th anniversary of the Negro Leagues was recognized throughout Major League Baseball on August 16, 2020, the Marlins threw back not to a Negro League team, but to another African American team in Miami with close ties to the Negro Leagues. The Miami Giants, a semi-pro team of Black ballplayers in the 1920s and 1930s, frequently played against Negro League stars who came through Miami on barnstorming tours. The Giants later became the Miami Ethiopian Clowns, a longstanding barnstorming team. Made by Nike in Cool Base material, these cream-colored jerseys feature wide, black braid around the neck and placket, above the sleeve ends, and down the sleeves themselves. "Giants" appears in black twill on front in a squared-off block font, while player numbers on back are in a stylized form of block in black. Because this game took place on the day of the league-wide Negro League celebration, the 2020 Negro Leagues anniversary patch was worn on front left chest. Most were removed before the jerseys were auctioned off.

Right: A notice about the Giants from a 1925 issue of the Miami Herald; An image of the Giants, with uniforms that mirror the Marlins' throwbacks.

MIAMI GIANTS TO PLAY

The Miami Giants, colored baseball team, has been organized and will begin its activities at City Park, opposite the gas plant on N. W. Seventeenth street. The first games will be played against West Palm Beach on next Sunday and Monday. The West Palm Beach team has just returned from a tour of three weeks and is in good shape.

2023 Turn Back the Clock to 1993

For their 25th anniversary, five years prior, the Marlins threw back to their 1993 inaugural home jerseys for one game. In 2023, they wore them almost every home Friday. These teal pinstriped jerseys are reproduced in Cool Base fabric by Nike, and like those by Majestic from five years before, they are nearly indistinguishable from the originals.

Front logo appears in teal/black/white, with black/teal player names (on proper nameplates) and black/white/teal on front and back numbers. The Marlins' original sleeve patch appears, though it switches sides from player to player to be opposite the team's ad patch, which was not part of the original set. The team patch is sewn in a different orientation here, with the fish facing more to 11 o'clock than to 10 o'clock as it used to. The inclusion of the ad patch leaves no room for the Inaugural Season patch that the originals bore. Patches aside, it is still a very faithful reproduction of their first set.

Prototypes and Oddballs

Back

1993 Prototype Home Faux Vest

The Russell tag on this jersey dates it to 1992–1993, and because the Marlins' first year was 1993, we can surmise that the Marlins were likely considering using a faux vest from the start: a white-bodied jersey with attached black sleeves. Other teams used this concept in production; among them the Angels and the Blue Jays, though several years later.

The Marlins did introduce an actual (sleeveless) vest in this style for 1993, issued with an accompanying teal or black undershirt. One thing that this prototype design would have promoted was commonality among the players on the field. When vests are used as a team uniform, players often wear all sorts of odd undershirts that don't match. Although the original 1993 team issued Marlins undershirts had the team patch on the left sleeve, game photos often show players wearing undershirts that have no patch on them at all. Notice that this jersey features a Russell logo sewn to the back of the neck like a real vest would. Perhaps they started with a production vest and added sleeves?

1993 Prototype Road

This specimen is very likely a pre-inaugural prototype design jersey by Russell, from the point in time that the Marlins were considering their uniform options for opening day. We know from the news article and photo early in this chapter that the team had settled on its uniform choices by July 8, 1992, and the shirt tagging ("Diamond Collection" tag with early logo and Intera fabric tag) is from 1992. Notice that there is no Russell "R" embroidered on the sleeve.

I bought this jersey blank and lettered it with the team's first manager's name. I have no proof that this is a MLB prototype, and it could have been destined for the minor leagues, but the Diamond Collection tagging is usually reserved for jerseys destined for the big league club.

The jersey body is the same grayish-green fabric used by the team, and the color combination for the front lettering is ultimately what was used on the road "FLORIDA" design that was chosen.

1993-1994 Benito Santiago Wears #09

1993

Twenty-season veteran catcher Benito Santiago started wearing number 9 in his second Major League season, during which he won the Rookie of the Year Award. Given that he was also born on March 9, why did he switch to the unusual choice of "09" in 1991? Simple, the vertical strap of his chest protector covered the number, and he wanted to make sure it was visible. Santiago's decision carried from the end of his tenure with the Padres in 1992 through his two following seasons with the Marlins in 1993 and 1994. The rest of his long career, he wore various other numbers for eight other teams (including "9" without the leading zero). And even though he wore the number for only a fraction of his playing days, it is frequently associated with him. Aside from a handful of players who wore "00" he is the only player we know of who has worn a leading zero in a jersey number.

Of note, outfielder Glenallen Hill once asked to wear "01" after being traded to Cleveland on June 27, 1991, but his request was denied, perhaps because manager John McNamara was then wearing "1". McNamara was fired two weeks later, and Hill took over "1"—without a zero—the next season.

- Here is an example of a prototype road jersey that the Marlins considered but did not adopt. The style of the Russell Authentic tag clearly places this jersey as from the 2000 season.
- The tackle twill wordmark is a fussy four-layer affair, featuring teal and black laid over a metallic silver outline layer, with a white layer outlining the whole thing. The flying fish is removed from the production jersey, and the tail under the word mimics that of the home jersey.
- Name and numbers on back are in three-color twill: black/teal/white. Name is on a plate. Sleeve-end knit trim is four-color(!): white/teal/black/metallic silver.
- Although not adopted in 2000, it was truly a sign of things to come, as the 2003 road jersey (bottom right) used the same wordmark with colors in different order, though the prototype's four-color sleeve end trim was not used.

Early 2000s Experimental Tech-Fabric Batting Practice

Always on the lookout for things that are different, I came across a couple of these jerseys that are decidedly not the heavy black mesh batting practice jerseys cataloged for use by the team in 1999–2002. Similar in every other detail, these are made of the first-generation Cool Base fabric of 2003 that, while lighter weight, tended to have very poor durability. It was susceptible to fabric pulls and aggressive fading in use. While these were advertised by their owner as “game used,” they do not show obvious signs of use in the photos, but the Majestic “0006” tag on the inside seam is a characteristic of a jersey made to team specifications for use on field, vs. one that was made for retail sale. The flag on the back of the collar was a characteristic of on-field late-2001 jerseys (after 9/11) and both Penny and Floyd were on the team roster in 2001–2002; Floyd was not on the Marlins roster in 2003.

My guess is that these were test jerseys made by Majestic to try out the new fabric that they planned to use for all teams in 2002 or 2003.

2012 Prototypes

Seemingly identical to those released for use in 2012, closer examination oft these prototypes show that the shape of the jumping fish, and the outlines and rainbow colors on the letter "M" on the team wordmark had not yet been finalized.

2016 Jose Fernandez Tribute #16 Jerseys

This story appeared in the Oct. 10, 2016 issue of SPORTS ILLUSTRATED
By S.L. Price

Wednesday October 12, 2016

When the rain began, some mourners held out a hand and sort of smiled—of course, rain—while others looked down, jaws tightening. A few sought cover next to the looming ballpark, but not many, and not the players and coaches who just a minute before had filed out to wait in the middle of NW6th St. The hearse was coming. Everyone knew. Onlookers tracked its progress via helicopter feed on shared smartphones, staring at the lone black Cadillac as it sailed along a strikingly emptied 836 East. Now you could hear that helicopter, above, hovering in the sky.

It was just past 2 p.m. on Wednesday, Sept. 28, the fourth day since the death of Jose Fernandez. Still the rain fell, but it wasn't the usual Miami afternoon deluge: The sun kept blazing and the light shower felt like relief, and the Marlins' owners and office staff, the exhausted players and coaches all wearing white T-shirts with RIP emblazoned on front, couldn't help but see it as another sign. Didn't weeping Dee Gordon, in their first game back after their teammate died, lead off with his first home run of the year, the longest shot of his life? Didn't slow-afoot Justin Bour, that dizzying Monday night, leg out his first-ever triple? Didn't the shattered players, all wearing Fernandez's number 16, somehow hold on to beat the playoff-chasing Mets, 7–3?

"That was God letting Jose shine through us one more time," Gordon said later. "Then today, when they drove him up? Right before it rained on us and then, as soon as he drove up, it was just ... gone. That's crazy."

But true: A siren sounded and then the car bearing the casket bearing the24-year-old body of Fernandez—Cuban-born, survivor of Fidel's jails and a raft on the Caribbean Sea, the most brilliant pitching talent of his generation—nosed into view. By then the first shock over the high-speed, 3 a.m. crash of his speedboat into a South Beach jetty on Sept. 25,which also killed friends Emilio Macias, 27, and Eduardo Rivero, 25, had ebbed. Now the impact of his loss upon his team, sport and community began to surreally hit home.

"It was,"said Ron Yacoub,the physical therapist who shepherded Fernandez through rehab after his 2014 Tommy John surgery, "upside-down world."

Indeed. Long derided for tin-eared relations with South Florida leaders and fans, owner Jeffrey Loria and Marlins management navigated the immediate aftermath with surprising deftness. A lone trumpet played a heart-crushing "Take Me Out to The Ballgame" to mark Monday's return to play. Fernandez's number was retired. The funeral procession would go onto hit the touchstones of the stricken Miami exile community—moving from here in Little Havana to a blessing at the Shrine of Our Lady of Charity to an impromptu stop at Westchester's La Carreta restaurant, where Fernandez ate pregame meals and employees raised their cups in a final cafecito toast. Never before had the team seemed so in tune with local sentiment.

"I don't remember an outpouring of sadness as big as this in my 56 years here," Miami mayor Tomas Regalado, born in Havana, said last Friday. "This was extreme. I know Joselito was popular and the fans and the millennials and old people loved him. But I didn't know it would hit them so hard. People are still crying."

I normally do not do much more than write a few lines about the reason for a team memorial. But the tragic death of Jose Fernandez in the early hours of September 25, 2016—a Cuban pitcher called "the best of his generation"touched a nerve in Miami.

http://www.si.com/mlb/2016/10/12/jose-fernandez-miami-marlins-death

Every player wore a Fernandez #16 jersey for this game, without objection from the league. Teammates wore a #16 patch on their left sleeves for the final week of the 2016 season, and on the left chest for the entire 2017 season. The team has no officially retired numbers, though no player has worn No.16 since Fernandez's death.

2020 Nike Sample Home

Though Nike's 2020 entry into MLB jerseys resulted only in the rebranding and relabeling of Majestic's previous Flex Base jersey template, it appears that Nike still produced sample jerseys for team inspection. Here is one such example, made up for the Marlins.

This jersey's pedigree as a sample is apparent in a few details. First, it is size 46, a common sample size, and the name "PLAYER" and number "20" are also typical for samples, where 20 represents the year for which the sample was made. Further, it carries interior tagging with the tell-tale sample coding that appears to read "MIA-HJ-D1-1-2020" (the tag photo is blurry) indicating it is version 1 (D1-1) of a Miami Marlins (MIA) home jersey (HJ). It is possible such samples were made for all of the teams jerseys, and possibly even some that made changes to the typical jerseys, but any such examples have yet to turn up.

Outwardly, this home white jersey appears just as it did on the field in 2020, a testament to the fact the team was not planning any changes for that season. However, there are still some small details in this sample that were updated before the full run of 2020 jerseys went into production. First, a heat-pressed neck tag which was not used in on-field jerseys. Next, an interior heat-pressed tag, almost twice as tall as the ones used by Majestic before and Nike after, appears inside the placket with the sample coding. This location was used by Majestic for team tagging, but Nike versions moved these tags below the jock tags on the lower front of the jerseys.

Finally, the "0730" code on the back of the laundry tag is the same used for Majestic's version of the Flex Base template. By the time these jerseys were released in 2020, the product code had been updated to "0890" to reflect the new Nike jerseys, even though nothing had really changed.

2023 Prototype Home

Soon after Nike took over MLB jersey manufacturing in 2020, they had intended to release their Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template as early as 2022. However, a source told Uni-Watch in 2022 that the plans were "pushed back at least to 2023, and possibly even 2024." Ultimately, the new template was in fact delayed to 2024, but here we have evidence that prototypes were made up in advance of the 2023 season, if not earlier.

This Marlins home jersey, at first glance, is mostly the same as what they wore before and after the switch from Nike's version of Flex Base to VPE. Closer inspection reveals that the template is VPE - including the lower MLB logo on back, smaller player name lettering, the band of fabric around the neck opening, sewn-in sleeve-end trim, a lightweight sleeve patch, and perforated back numbers. (The home jerseys ultimately did not use perforated numbers.) The tell-tale "Player" and "23" on back reinforce this as a sample, intended for the 2023 season.

Oddly, the sleeve-end trim appears in colors that the Marlins did not wear before or since, powder blue/white/royal blue. It looks more like something the Blue Jays would use, but perhaps at the sample stage, this was all that was available, or perhaps the team was considering a change it vetoed.

The heat-pressed inventory tag also reveals some info, and leaves us with some mysteries. It reads "DH0502 MQM 2023 HOME CONVERSION JERSEY P2." There is also a small, handwritten "3" on the bottom corner of the tag. Here, "MQM" is a code Nike has used elsewhere for the Marlins, and "2023 home" is self explanatory. The "DH0502" indication is not clear, although Nike has used a "DX" prefix for four-digit style numbers in its Vapor Premier Elite line for colleges, so this may be an internal model number for the pro jerseys. The use of "Conversion Jersey P2" is also unclear, unless it refers to converting from the Flex Base template to this one, and this is a second iteration of a sample.

2023 Prototype Alternate

Here is another example of a 2023 Nike Vapor Premier Elite prototype jersey. Unlike the home prototype also shown in this chapter, this example is for what appears to be an rejected version of a new alternate jersey.

Given the details of this jersey, including the lower MLB logo on back, smaller player name lettering, the band of fabric around the neck opening, sewn-in sleeve-end trim, and perforated back numbers, it is clear it is an early VPE sample. The tell-tale "Player" and "23" on back reinforce this as a prototype, intended for the 2023 season.

In contrast to the home sample that had a few slight style details changed, this alternate is unlike anything the Marlins wore before or since. It is medium blue in color and includes the same blue/white/royal blue sleeve trim of the home sample, more reminiscent of the Blue Jays than Marlins. In fact, a similar Blue Jays road sample had the same trim. Perhaps at the sample stage, this was all that was available.

The jersey sports the team's "M" cap logo on front left chest, with numbers in black/white/re drop shadow and player name in black/white. The front logo and all other lettering match the team's 2019-2023 spring training light blue jersey that was also used as an in-season alternate at times.

Like that of the home sample, the heat-pressed inventory tag on the alternate also reveals some info, and leaves us with some mysteries. It reads "D09309 MQM 2023 ALT2 CONVERSION JERSEY P1." There is also a small, handwritten "2" on the bottom corner of the tag. Here, "MQM" is a code Nike has used elsewhere for the Marlins, and "2023 ALT2" is self explanatory, assuming that the black alternate was considered ALT1. The "D09309" indication is not clear, although Nike has used a "DX" prefix for four-digit style numbers in its Vapor Premier Elite line for colleges, so this may be an internal model number for the pro jerseys. The use of "Conversion Jersey P1" is also unclear, unless it refers to converting from the Flex Base template to this one, and this is a first iteration of multiple samples.

Ultimately, the Marlins did adopt a new alternate blue jersey, but it was a modification to the existing spring training alternate rather than a new direction as represented in this rejected sample.

2024 Prototype Home/Road

RGVDEAL on eBay

In advance of the switch to Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) in the 2024 season, Nike made prototypes of jerseys on the new template for team review. By the point that these samples were made, teams had already seen some early drafts with many missing or incorrect details, just to get a sense of the materials and construction. However, many of the later samples, like the ones shown here, were very close to what eventually appeared on the field in 2024. These Marlins home and road versions are examples. In many ways they replicate the team's home and road jerseys that they had worn since 2019, just carried over to VPE. This meant that the original sleeve-end trim was now sewn into the edge of the sleeve instead of on it, player names and numbers are smaller with names more arched, and back numbers are perforated (which was not an element of the team's final, on-field home and road jerseys for 2024).

RGVDEAL on eBay

Note the sample information that is on the Nike tags, which read "MARLINS HOME JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT" and MARLINS ROAD JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT" with 44 being the size, which was not typical in earlier Nike samples, which were usually size 46. Also, the designation of "regular fit" was something not commonly seen on jersey tags, so it may have indicated the intent to use "bucket sizing" on jerseys, where there were a handful of standard cuts in different proportions available to players rather than the specific customizations of years past. Nike's 2024 pants were also done in bucket sizing, which was very unpopular with players. It is unclear what the text "DH0502-100" and "DH0502-074" on the front tags mean. They are likely internal production codes, as all 2024 samples we have seen have different codes in these spots that we have not yet deciphered.

Oddballs

- Top left: Any jersey with the Authentic tag that I have never seen worn on the field catches my eye. The one at top left may have been an unused prototype 2003 BP jersey.
- The Authentic-tagged white BP at top and bottom center is a retail-only "authentic tagged" jersey and is not team worn. This store-bought garment has the 2003 World Series patch on the sleeve.
- The only thing odd about the two jerseys at right are the long names on the back. I love to see how the tailor manages these two—among the longest-ever player names in the major leagues.

2023-2025 Marlins Advertising Patches

2025 City Connect 2.0

With the start of the 2023 season, teams were permitted to sell an advertising patch, up to four inches square, to appear on one of their jersey sleeves. The sleeve on which the patch appeared could change from player to player, and each team that sold a patch handled the placement differently.

The Marlins struck a sponsor patch deal with ADT, a security system company. The patches first appeared on Opening Day 2023. The patch is a blue octagon with a white border and the ADT logo in white.

The placement of the patch varies depending on the handedness of each player. The team's normal logo patches remain on each jersey, on the opposite sleeve from the ad patch. In 2023, the patch was also included on the team's throwback uniform.

In 2025, the team's City Connect 2.0 uniform had a sponsor patch colored to match the jersey. The patch is a black octagon with a teal/pink gradient border and the ADT logo in white/teal.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Benito Santiago Florida Marlins Game Worn 1993 Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: February 21, 2024 Certification Number: 24-0221J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Florida Marlins gray-bodied size 42 (marked and measured) Russell six-button road jersey lettered for #09 Benito Santiago. "Florida" across both front panels with jumping fish design in Marlin Blue, black and white. White/teal/black knit trim sewn in at the sleeve ends. Team disk patch on the left sleeve, no patch presently on the right sleeve, though the clear outline of a removed 1993 Inaugural Season patch remains. Player number "09" on the left chest and on back in black, outlined with Marlin Blue. Name on back is in black outlined by Marlin Blue, stitched to a single-needle serged edged, perfectly color-matching plate. Notably, for several years of his career Santiago specified his number to be "09" because he did not like the fact that the straps of the catcher chest protector obscured his number on the field. With "09" the strap went between the numbers instead of overtop them. Notably, the back numbers on this jersey are sewn crooked.

In 1993 with the expansion Florida Marlins, Santiago played in 139 games and hit .230 with 19 home runs. During his 20 year career, While Santiago first made an impression with his offensive statistics, he soon became known for his defensive prowess, most notably for his strong throwing arm. Santiago was known for his ability to throw out would-be base stealers from a kneeling position. During his career, Santiago was considered the premier defensive catcher in the National League. He was a four-time Silver Slugger Award winner, a three-time Gold Glove Award winner, as well as a five-time All-Star. Santiago was the unanimous selection for the 1987 National League Rookie of the Year Award. (Baseball Almanac, Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell R in teal outlined with black directly embroidered on the right sleeve end. Russell Diamond Collection tag on the front left tail, indicating the size as 42, and in the correct, specific style used in only 1992-1993 seasons consistent with other jerseys worn by the player at this stage of his career. The Russell 1992-1993 only Intera® Fabric flag tag is stitched pinched under the bottom corse of stitching holding the locker tag in place, and this jersey lacks a size tag in the neck: both of these are characteristics of jerseys made for the purpose of team issue, vs. ones made for retail sale. Intera® fabric was a short-lived Russell innovation that was supposed to be a softer fabric, but it instead wrinkled and faded badly and was quickly discontinued. Not all 1993 Marlins jerseys were made of Intera® and I would observe that this one does not seem to be made of that fabric, regardless of the tagging; I am certain this one is made of standard 100% polyester and is mis-tagged from the factory, something that is believable to me as an authenticator, as both styles of jerseys were being made simultaneously in 1993. The Marlins team-tagged their jersey in 1993 (though some were not tagged) and the team tagging on this jersey matches exemplars. The tag is 1" x 3" piece of white knit jersey fabric with 09-SANTIAGO-93 SET 1 printed on it in a shiny black Plastisol ink.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey exhibits clear signs of use by a catcher. It has signature wear to the nameplate and the center of the back numbers creating edge fraying and lose stitching, this caused by constant rubbing from the back strap of the catcher's chest protector. The removal of the 1993 sleeve patch is understandable; jerseys were recycled into spring training the next year where all year-specific patches were removed. A light table evaluation shows that all lettering stitching is original and without contrivance. There is no damage to note on this jersey and no signs of repairs.

Top left, the prominent glue mark on the right sleeve of the jersey in review is from the removal of the 1993 Marlins Inaugural Season patch. That patch is shown here, on an exemplar jersey. Middle row, signature fraying of the twill lettering from abrasion of the catcher's chest protector. Bottom row, matching 1993 Marlins exemplar tagging from my library. Note that the first and third tags below have 100% polyester tags, not the Intera® one.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly sized, tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits moderately heavy wear, and appears to have no contrivances of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine as issued to and worn by catcher Benito Santiago.

Gary Sheffield Florida Marlins Team Issued 1990s Home Game Jersey

Examination Date: April 2,2022 Certification Number: 20-0402J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Florida Marlins white with teal pinstripes size 48 six-button home jersey lettered for #10 Gary Sheffield. "Marlins" across both front panels with underline in Marlin Blue, black and white. Team disk patch on the left sleeve, no patch on the right sleeve. Player number "10" on the left chest and on back, in black, white and Marlin Blue. Name on back is in black outlined by Marlin Blue, stitched to a single-needle serged edged white plate.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell R in teal outlined with black directly embroidered on the right sleeve end. Russell Diamond Collection tag 1994-1999 style on the front left tail, indicating the size as 48, consistent with other jerseys worn by the player at this stage of his career. A small "100% polyester" flag tag is stitched pinched under the bottom corse of stitching holding the locker tag in place, and this jersey lacks a size tag in the neck: both of these are characteristics of jerseys made for the purpose of team issue, vs. ones made for retail sale. Sheffield played on the Marlins 1993-1998, all years while this style of jersey was worn. The Russell locker tag style is consistent with that span of years. In 1997 the team wore a sleeve patch that was never sewn on this jersey. Unfortunately, the Marlins did not team tag their jerseys at all during this period, so it is not possible to conclude team issue or a determine a specific year of issue.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey exhibits little or no signs of wash or wear. All elements are crisp and clean. There are no signs of alteration or repair.

Conclusion: All characteristics of this jersey point to it having been sewn by Russell at its shop on a team-issue style jersey. It does not show signs of use, but it is correctly sized and player customized for Gary Sheffield. I would judge this to be an authentic team prepared/issued jersey.

Dave Magadan Florida Marlins Team Issued 1993-1994 Road Game Jersey

Examination Date: July 3, 2023 Certification Number: 23-0703J06

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Florida Marlins gray-bodied size 48 six-button home jersey lettered for #18 Dave Magadan. "Florida" across both front panels with jumping fish design in Marlin Blue, black and white. White/teal/black knit trim sewn in at the sleeve ends. Team disk patch on the left sleeve, no patch presently on the right sleeve, though light table examination shows the outline of a removed 1993 Inaugural Season patch. Player number "18" on the left chest and on back in black, outlined with Marlin Blue. Name on back is in black outlined by Marlin Blue, stitched to a single-needle serged edged perfectly color-matching plate.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: Russell R in teal outlined with black directly embroidered on the right sleeve end. Russell Diamond Collection tag on the front left tail, indicating the size as 48, consistent with other jerseys worn by the player at this stage of his career. A small "100% polyester" flag tag is stitched pinched under the bottom corse of stitching holding the locker tag in place, and this jersey lacks a size tag in the neck: both of these are characteristics of jerseys made for the purpose of team issue, vs. ones made for retail sale. Magadan played for the Marlins in 1993 from April until the end of June when he was traded to the Mariners. He rejoined the Marlins in 1994, and played 74 games from April through July when he was released.

The Marlins team-tagged their jersey in 1993 (though some were not tagged), but not in 1994. Most 1993 jerseys were made from the special "Intera Fabric" that was troublesome and was quickly discontinued. Conversely, this jersey has no team tagging and is not Intera, and has a 1994 -and-later style Russell tail tag. In 1994 the Marlins wore the MLB 125th sleeve patch on their right sleeve, along with all the other teams in MLB. This jersey shows no signs that the 125th patch was ever affixed, yet it does show the removal outline of a 1993 Inaugural season patch. The nameplate construction especially bears the hallmarks of team issue; it is in exactly matching fabric and has a single-needle serged edge.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey does not exhibits clear signs of wash or wear. All elements are crisp and clean. There are no signs of alteration or repair. Regarding the ghost of the 1993 sleeve patch, while not certain, it is a possibility that this patch was added by a later collector-owner and then removed prior to being presented to me. These patches are available in reproduction.

Conclusion: All characteristics of this jersey point to it having been sewn by Russell in 1994 at its shop on a team-issue style jersey. It does not show signs of use, but it is correctly sized for Dave Magadan. I would judge this to be an authentic 1994 team prepared jersey, but would not have been game worn, lacking its 1994 sleeve patch.

Letter of Professional Opinion

2003 Miguel Cabrera Florida Marlins Gray Autographed "Rookie" Game Jersey

Examination Date: October 14, 2021 Certification Number: 211014J02

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Florida Marlins Miguel Cabrera gray road jersey Russell six button, size 50 without special tailoring. All layered twill four-color lettering; metallic black, metallic silver, Marlins blue, and white. Four-color "20" on back, "CABRERA" arched and direct sewn on back above his number, all in the same four-color pattern. Russell "R" logo is direct-embroidered to the end of the left sleeve in black thread, and above it is the Marlins Jumping Fish/"F" team secondary logo patch embroidered in black, silver, turquoise and white. On the right sleeve is sewn the Marlins' colorful 10th Anniversary patch, worn only in 2003. The MLB silhouetted batter logo patch is stitched to the center of the back neck, in the marlins colors of black, white and teal. A survey of other credibly authenticated Cabrera jerseys from early in the player's career show that he wore size 50 and 52 jerseys, often with 2" extra length. This jersey does not have extra length. It is signed on the front right below the team crest, "Miguel Cabrera 20 Game Used Rookie Jersey" in black marker, and on the back number "2" in silver Sharpie. I have no professional opinion on the validity of signatures.

Cabrera made his major league debut on June 20, 2003, at 20 years old. In his first season Cabrera batted .268 (84-for-314), with 12 home runs, 62 RBIs, 39 runs, 21 doubles, and three triples in 87 games played, and received NL Rookie of the Month honors for both July and September. Cabrera's postseason play helped propel Florida to the World Series title over the New York Yankees and landed him on the cover of ESPN The Magazine during the offseason. He finished fifth in the NL Rookie of the Year voting. (Wikipedia)

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Russell locker tag in the 2001-2003 style is sewn to the outer left front tail. Directly beneath the Russell tag is a small white fabric tag, " 50 100% Polyester" it is frayed, stand and curled from wear. Typical of 2003 Marlins team issued and game worn jerseys, there is no other team tagging at all. The jersey is MLB hologrammed, and its database entry is dated September 15, 2017 (14 years after the jersey's issue), and simply says "Inscription: Game Worn Rookie Jersey". It does not offer information on dates it may have been worn.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows signs of light, if any, wash and wear, as there is no notable puckering of the four-layer thick twill as quickly happens when these are laundered in hot water. The manufacturer and size tags are crisp and unfrayed/unstained. There is no piling to the gray jersey fabric as often happens in the wash with these jerseys that use abrasive metallic twill lettering. The player lettering on back is sewn onto the jersey only around its edges as is correct compared to exemplars. A light table examination shows no alterations.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly sized, tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits very light if any and wash wear, and appears to have no contrivances of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine as issued to Miguel Cabrera in his 2003 "Rookie" season.

Description: Florida Marlins Miguel Cabrera black alternate jersey Russell six button, size 50 without special tailoring. All layered twill four-color lettering; metallic silver, metallic black, Marlins blue, and white. Manufacturer and Team Tagging: The Russell locker tag in the 2001-2003 style is sewn to the outer left front tail. Directly beneath the Russell tag is a small white fabric tag, "50 100% Polyester" it is frayed, stained and curled from wear. Typical of 2003 Marlins team issued and game worn jerseys, there is no other team tagging at all. The jersey is not MLB hologrammed, and while that program began in 2001, it was still being used inconsistently in 2003. A survey of other credibly authenticated Cabrera jerseys from early in the player's career show that he wore size 50 and 52 jerseys, often with 2" extra length. This jersey does not have extra length.

Wear & Repairs: This jersey shows signs of moderate wash and wear, with softening of the fabric, puckering and fraying to the tagging, with even puckering of the four-layer thick twill. The player lettering on back is sewn onto the jersey only around its edges as is correct compared to exemplars. There are a significant number of loose threads on the lettering. A light table examination shows no alterations to the player lettering.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly sized, tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits game use and wash wear, and appears to have no contrivances of any kind. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Miguel Cabrera in his 2003 "Rookie" season.

Mike (Giancarlo) Stanton 2010 BP/Spring Training Rookie Jersey, Autographed

Examination Date: November 25, 2024 Certification Number: 24-1125J01

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: Lightweight Majestic Coolbase black pullover BP style jersey with one-button neck, white mesh side panels, size XL, reasonably sized for the player. Vacuum-applied flock transfer team crest on front, in textured white outlined with black then gray. This style of jersey and lettering was worn only 2007-2010, but as Stanton's rookie season was 2010 and this is #80 (his regular season number was 27) we can safely assume this is from that year. Similarly applied three-colored flock lettering on back, in white/black/white. Jersey is autographed on the "0" on back in black marker and there is a Beckett authentication sticker next to the signature, serial number C03593. I have no professional opinion on the autograph. This jersey was presented without provenance, and was claimed to have been used in spring training, though this style was also used throughout the season as a pre-game batting practice shirt. I will note that the lettering for this style of jersey was unique, and hard to duplicate. Because of the process used to apply the player lettering, this one is quite likely original and authentic as made by Majestic in its facility.

Manufacturer and Team Tagging: These jerseys were not team tagged in any way. The sole indication of team issue is the inside steam tag that is numbered with Majestic's code for team-specification jerseys, 0068. (If it was made for retail sale it would have the code 6800.) The tag shows wash wear with some staining and curling.

Wear & Repairs: The jersey shows signs of light use and is without contrivance, damage or repairs. The inside seam tagging is slightly worn and curled. The fabric used on these jerseys faded quickly in use, and on this one fading is extremely minimal on the tops of the shoulders where it would appear first. The jersey presents in excellent condition.

Conclusion: This jersey is in excellent original condition and has the proper markings to be considered team issue. It shows light but appropriate wear and lacks any hint of contrivance. In my opinion, this jersey is authentic as worn by Mike/Giancarlo Stanton in spring training for the 2010 Florida Marlins.

Chapter 24

New York Mets

Game Worn Guide to MLB Jerseys

1970-2025 Tenth Edition

William F. Henderson

Mets Uniform History Notes

- The New York Mets joined the National League as an expansion team for the 1962 season. New York was still reeling from the loss of both its NL teams to California following the 1958 season.
- The Mets adopted the colors of the departed franchises as its own: royal blue from the Dodgers, orange from the Giants.
- The Mets' original uniforms were models of classic simplicity—blue pinstripes at home with a cursive "Mets" script, and road grays featuring "New York" in a Tuscan-style font lifted from the 1957 New York Giants (also used by the Red Sox and Angels at the time). As of 2025, the primary uniforms remain surprisingly faithful to those 1962 originals.
- So why is this chapter so long? The reason lies in the team's relentless experimentation with road jerseys, alternate designs, and small but frequent changes to the home uniform.
- The Mets made the change from flannels to knits in 1972 with no fanfare; the new knits looked identical to the 1971 flannel versions, keeping the same appearance through 1977.
- Beginning in 1978, the Mets adopted two-button pullover jerseys with the same front wordmark, adding sleeve and neck trim. Player names debuted in 1979. In 1983, "racing stripes" are added down the sides and over the shoulders, mirroring the road jersey changes of 1982.
- The racing stripe design continues through 1992, but in 1991 the home jersey reverts to a button-front design.
- The 1993–1994 seasons see a return to simplicity: racing stripes and other trim are dropped, and the front wordmark receives an underlining for these two years only.
- In 1995, the home jersey returns to a 1970 look—button-front pinstripes, simple wordmark, and no underlining—remaining this way through 1998.
- In 1999, a black drop shadow is added to all home uniform elements. This detail remains for 13 years, vanishing in 2012 and bringing the design full circle. The 2012–2025 uniform looks very much like the 1970 version.
- Road uniform changes have outpaced the home design. The original simple and beautiful 1962 Tuscan "NEW YORK" wordmark had carried through to 1973 without change. In 1974, the road gray changes to "Mets" script like the home, and in 1978 to a two-button Henley through 1981, as trim is added to the sleeves and neck. Player names debut in 1979 and in 1982 the pullover gains wide racing stripes and a V-neck. This look lasts through 1986.
- 1987's one-year road design has "New York" in script on a gray background, changes to a simple Yankees-like "NEW YORK" block lettering for 1988, changes back to a button front for 1991, then reverts back to a New York script (different from 1987) with an underline for 1993–1994.
- In 1995, the team returns to the classic Tuscan "New York" road script (last seen in 1973), which remains in use—through 2025—despite a black drop shadow being added from 1999–2011.
- All of which is enough—but we have barely mentioned the alternate uniforms. Blue alternates first appear 1982–1984 (as a V-neck), then return in 2013–2024 (as button-downs), when different versions are made for home and road. A "snow white" home alternate is introduced for 1997, gains drop shadows for 1998–2011, until it reverts back to its 1997 simplicity for 2012–2014. A black home alternate is introduced for 1998 and a road version in 1999. And while the home black alternate continues through the 2012 season, the road version quietly disappears after the 2008 season ends.
- By 2014, the black alternates are completely gone, replaced by aforementioned blue versions. Snow whites vanish for 2015. A camouflage alternate jersey comes for 2014 and lasts through 2015.
- New team ownership brings back the polarizing black jerseys for several games in 2021 before making them an official alternate in 2022. Their trim and wordmark will be tweaked several times over the next three seasons.
- 2025 introduces a revised road gray and a new alternate road pullover, both with retro touches. The road gray adds sleeve and neck trim reminiscent of the 1978–1981 and 1993–1994 road editions and the blue V-neck pullover revives the one-year 1987 "New York" style road script while evoking memories of the 1982–1984 alternate blue tops. The pullovers are the team's first since 1991 and only the third MLB team (Angels, Nationals) to adopt a pullover for regular use on the new Nike VPE template.
- In 2024, the Mets unveiled their City Connect uniform, drawing inspiration from the NYC subway. The charcoal gray jersey features large "NYC" styled in Mets road Tuscan font, with black pinstripes made up of circles and diamonds echoing local and express subway station markings. Back number and name is rendered in the same Tuscan font as the wordmar
- From 1970 to 2025, the Mets' uniform history reflects a blend of tradition and experimentation. Anchored by their signature pinstriped home whites and blue/orange palette, the team has introduced a wide variety of alternates over the decades. But while they've made periodic departures from their classic look, the team has consistently returned to its core visual identity.

Home Pinstripe Detail

1970–1986, 1993–1996: No pattern twill

1972–1992: zig-zag "engineered" woven-in pinstripes

1993–1994: straight pinstripes

1995–2025: wavy pin-stripes, not sewn into the fabric (non-engineered)

1987–1992: Dazzle twill

Sadly, the entire remaining original vintage supply of dazzle twill was destroyed in a fire and flood at Liebe Company's St. Louis headquarters in the late 1990s.

1997–2011: Glacier twill

2012: Return to no pattern twill

A consistent point—the player numbers and name styles always copy the color pattern of the Mets script. For example, if it is three-color Mets or New York front script, the numbers and name are three-color. If the team script has a drop shadow, then the name and number will have a drop shadow. The twill used for the player name and number lettering is always the same type as the front wordmark.

The Mets official Skyline Logo is a beautifully balanced design that was born with the Mets in 1962. At left is the original version. Note the small NY at the left center. In the center is the 1998 freshening of the design. Note the stitching has been slightly changed, the NY hidden in the buildings eliminated and the white outlines made thinner. At the right is what is known as the Midnight variant of the logo, incorporating black, used on alternate jerseys and BPs.

During 1995-1999, the Mets likely had several complete sets of uniforms, some made by Russell and others by AIS. Mets jerseys from this point onward have been seen with set numbers such as Set 9 and Set E, indicating multiple sets were made, most likely for the purpose of being sold as game used by the team.

Home, Road and Alternate Jerseys

1970-1971 Home

1970

The Mets wore flannel uniforms for their first ten years of existence from their beginning in 1962 through 1971. The Mets' original home jersey is a masterpiece of classic simplicity—proving that a uniform doesn't need excessive ornamentation to be attractive.

The jersey fabric is cream-colored flannel with a blue chalk pinstripe. All lettering is royal blue felt on top of a base layer of orange twill. "Mets" is slanted across the chest. Front Block font numbers are on the left chest in the same color combination. Block numbers adorn the back, and no player names are used. The Mets classic "Skyline" patch is sewn on the left sleeve. Spalding is the manufacturer both years.

This 1970 jersey is identical to the one introduced in the team's inaugural 1962 season. The only change has been the addition of front numbers in 1965 and the sleeve patch added for 1963. Except for the addition of player names, the 2025 edition remains virtually unchanged—55 years hence.

1970-1971 Road

The Mets' road jersey for 1970 remains unchanged from the 1962 original, except for the addition of front numbers in 1965. The "NEW YORK" font used on the front is known as Tuscan, and it has also appeared on uniforms of the Red Sox and Angels. In these final years of flannels, the lettering uses royal blue felt layered over orange tackle twill.

Road jerseys are made by Wilson at the end of the flannel era, and Wilson continues as the supplier into the knit era. Wilson's Varsity number font is used on road jerseys both before and after the switch to knits, remaining consistent, and it differs from the Block font used by Rawlings on home uniforms.

1972-1973 Road

1972

The Mets' first double-knit road jersey is identical in design to the 1971 flannel. This jersey style appears during two separate periods—1972–1973 and again in 1995–1997—but the versions are not identical.

These early Mets road jerseys have no names on the back, feature sleeve ends with no trim, and use Varsity font numbers (while home jerseys use Block font). The difference in number fonts between home and road jerseys likely stems from the Mets not specifying a font style—so Wilson defaulted to their house font, Varsity.

The Mets' Skyline logo patch is sewn to the left sleeve. Note the different ball-stitching pattern on this early patch.

1974-1975 Road

Rawlings takes over as the supplier of Mets road uniforms in 1974–1975. The team's home script replaces the legacy "NEW YORK" lettering across the front for the first time in 1974. The jersey features seven gray buttons and narrow blue knit trim around the placket. The Mets' Skyline patch is sewn to the left sleeve. The Rawlings red tag is sewn to the outer right tail, and player tagging is stitched inside the back of the neck onto shiny twill.

The player number font changes to Block with Serifs (notably with "feet" on the 1, 4, and 7), which differs from the Block font used on home jerseys. It's curious that Rawlings, making both home and road sets, used a different font for each—but that is the approach they took.

1976-1977 Road

Stephen Kraljic Collection

The road jersey remains button-front with royal blue knit trim around the collar and down the placket, with seven gray buttons. In 1976–1977, jerseys are produced by Goodman & Sons of Southern California and display a noticeably slanted and somewhat distorted version of the Mets script, tilted too far to the right. Two-color, extra-wide Block with Serif numbers—royal/orange—are used, again differing from the home jersey style. No names on back.

Right: Photo of Mays & Aaron can be dated to 1976 by the Mets script and the 1976 pillbox Mets cap. The photo is from the Hall of Fame game. Note Mays' 1976 armband, also visible on the example (top left).

Stephen Kraljic Collection

As these were passed to the minor leagues, 1976 commemorative sleeve patches and armbands were almost universally removed.

1976 jerseys have no collar tagging, while 1977 jerseys do (right). Goodman uses its own fonts for player names that, typical of their work and the era's technology, are inexact and appear hand-drawn. Oddly, the twill used for player numbers differs from the team script, as surviving examples show uneven fading between the two.

1979

This pullover jersey features a two-button Henley-style neck. Sleeve and neck trim is knit in royal blue/orange/royal blue. Note the following year-to-year differences: 1978 is the final year without player names on back 1979–1981 names are sewn on nameplates using the blocky Rawlings font—also seen on Cardinals and Orioles jerseys. Names are sewn in a steep semi-circular arch with a wide white border surrounding them on the nameplate. In 1982, names remain on a plate but switch to Rawlings' taller and narrower NOB Block font, used by most other teams. Player numbers are positioned unusually low—typically 9–9½" from the collar. That same year, the sleeve "Skyline" patch is removed. Nameplates were routinely stripped at the end of each season, and uniforms were sent to the minor leagues. Assume that any surviving examples have had their nameplates replaced.Notice Rawlings tag position – can be either inside or outside the tail.

- 1978–1979: Tag inside tail.
- 1980–1981: Tag outside tail or inside collar

Rawlings resumes as the maker of all Mets uniforms. The jersey shifts to a Henley pullover (two-button neck). The Mets script no longer has a break in the middle and is layered royal blue/orange twill. Front numbers use Rawlings' Front Block variant. The Mets' Skyline patch is sewn on the left sleeve. There are no names on back in 1978, but they appear on all road jerseys beginning in 1979. Names are steeply arched, and numbers are positioned very low.

From 1978–1980, all jerseys—home and away—use Block Standard numbers. (Road jerseys change to Block with Serifs in 1981.)

1981 Road

Below: I restored the nameplate on the Johnson jersey. It is reasonable to assume that all 1981 Mets jerseys encountered today have had their original nameplates replaced, as they were stripped in bulk and sent to the minors.

The 1981 road gray jerseys are otherwise identical to the 1978–1980 versions, but they oddly use the Block with Serifs number font—most noticeable on numerals with “feet,” such as 1, 4, and 7. The home jerseys, also made by Rawlings, continue to use the standard Rawlings Athletic Block font. The Rawlings tag is located outside the tail.

1982-1985 Road

1983

For 1982, the team switches to Rawlings gray V-neck jerseys for road use. Sleeve end trim is removed, and wide orange/blue/orange "racing stripes" are added along the sides and over the tops of the sleeves. The trim is sewn into the construction of the jersey, not applied on top. Numbers use Rawlings' Block font. Nameplates are still used to make it easier to reissue jerseys in the minor leagues after MLB use concludes. Most surviving examples in the hobby have replacement nameplates. Rawlings uses two fonts for player names: Condensed and Extra Condensed, with the latter reserved for longer names. By 1985, neck tagging changes from the older hand-chain stitching to machine embroidery.

1982 Alternate Road

This one-year-only style was worn exclusively on the road. Although easily mistaken for a batting practice jersey, this alternate is made of solid (non-mesh) fabric and features orange/royal blue/orange trim on the sleeves and neck. Batting practice jerseys have white or gray in the trim and do not have names on back. Identify game-worn versions by the year and set tags sewn into the neck — BP jerseys do not have these tags.

The Mets script is orange trimmed with gray. The name on back and the numbers on front and back all match the Mets script: orange trimmed in gray — not white. Back numbers are in the Block font, while front numbers use the Front Block variant. Names on nameplates are used on this seldom-seen jersey.

1983

n 1983, the home jersey adopts a V-Neck and also receives the racing stripe trim introduced on the road jerseys in 1982. Royal blue collar trim is used. The Skyline patch is removed from the sleeve with the addition of the stripes. Two-color lettering, names, and numbers are all rendered in royal/orange. Player names are sewn on nameplates every year. Front numbers are often widely spaced, with placement varying seemingly at the whim of the stitcher.

1983 Alternate Home

Stephen Kraljic Collection

Over the years, there has been much discussion among my panel of devoted Mets collectors and experts about the on-field use of these alternate home jerseys. Clearly, these jerseys exist—we've held them in hand, and photos show them complete with proper tagging. But the debate remains: were they ever actually worn in a game? As one expert contends, we have no proof they were—but we also have no proof they weren't! Most of the game videotapes from the 1983 Mets season were wiped and reused by WOR-TV, leaving little visual archive of the year.

With orange/pale gray/orange trim on the neck and sleeves, and light gray outlines around the lettering, this jersey closely resembles the home batting practice jersey of the same period. The key differences: the game jersey includes white outlines and trim, and it features either names sewn on a nameplate or numbers positioned low enough to allow for one. BP jerseys, by contrast, have no name on back and are made of a lighter-weight, solid fabric. BP jerseys are also untagged for year and set. Note that the sleeve and collar trim are different from the similar-looking 1982 alternate home jersey.

A white index card laid next to the lettering and trim shows without a doubt that they are pale gray. Without this assist, they are easily mistaken for white.

1983-1984 Alternate Road

The 1983–1984 alternate jersey features gray/orange Mets lettering sewn across the front. The trim is orange/gray/orange. This jersey closely resembles the 1984–1986 road BP jersey, with the exception that it includes a name on back, sewn on a nameplate. The BP jersey, made of mesh, lacks a name on back and has no year/set tagging. Game-worn versions can be identified by the year and set tags sewn into the neck—BP jerseys do not have these tags. Even experts admit that the Mets' use of royal blue alternate jerseys in the mid-1980s is poorly documented. These game jerseys are nearly indistinguishable from the 1981–1986 road BP jersey (shown later in this chapter), which lacked a name on back, and had no year/set tagging.

Long names get the extra-condensed font treatment Deciding when to apply that template is entirely up to the stitcher, though eight letters appears to be the trigger.

Goodman takes over as the Mets' uniform supplier for what turns out to be their 1986 championship season. The jersey remains a V-neck with royal blue neck trim, and wide racing stripes continue along the sides and over the sleeve tops. To the casual observer, the jersey appears identical to the 1985 Rawlings version—but to detail-obsessed collectors, there are noticeable differences. The Mets logo is proportioned differently—"clunky," some say—especially at the left side of the "M" and the top of the "S." The script is also slightly larger, with "METS" spanning 11.5 pinstripes in 1986 versus 10.5 in other years. Goodman's number fonts differ as well: the back numbers are taller and narrower, while the front numbers are taller and bolder. Nameplates are still used. Condensed font is applied to regular-length names, while Extra Condensed is used for longer names.

Goodman returns for a single year to produce the team's 1986 jerseys—its championship season—and uniform experts can spot the differences. They note that the Mets script appears "clunkier" in 1986, especially at the far left of the "M" and the top of the "S." The logo is also larger on the Goodman jerseys compared to those made by Rawlings.

Names are sewn on nameplates, and two fonts are used: Condensed and Extra Condensed, depending on the length of the player name. Goodman's number fonts differ from Rawlings', though the differences are subtle. A 25th Anniversary patch is sewn on the left sleeve, positioned over the racing stripe.

Rawlings becomes the official supplier of team uniforms to MLB in 1987. If a team chooses to use Rawlings, the company has the right to display its logo on the jersey sleeve. The Rawlings logo is embroidered in white over the racing stripe near the end of the right sleeve.

The use of player nameplates is discontinued in 1987; names are now sewn directly onto the jersey. Continuing recent tradition, the Mets use a two-color Condensed font for shorter player names and Extra Condensed for longer ones.

The Mets also switch to a special fabric known as "dazzle twill," used on both the blue and orange layers of their jersey lettering. Dazzle twill is finely ribbed, almost like micro-corduroy, and reflects light differently than standard matte twill.

This one-year-only road jersey features a cursive New York script, used exclusively in 1987. Royal blue V-neck trim debuts on the road jersey and will remain through 1990. Front numbers are in a two-color Front Block style; back numbers and names use two-color Block. Nameplates are not used. Wide racing stripes run over the sleeve tops and down the jersey sides. The Rawlings script logo, appearing for the first time, is embroidered near the end of the right sleeve

It is reasonable to assume that many of these jerseys went directly from on-field use in 1987 to the collector market, as a relatively high number have surfaced and still retain the original NOB. Starting in 1987, the Mets discontinue use of nameplates, and the practice of removing player names before sending jerseys to the minors ends. Additionally, road jerseys featuring the MLB city name were rarely useful in the minors unless the front lettering was also removed. However, several 1987 road jerseys we've seen clearly once had the NOB covered with a blank nameplate for later use.

An uninspired, utilitarian block-lettering style is adopted for the 1988 pullover gray road jersey. The “NEW YORK” wordmark appears in Block Condensed font and is rendered in dazzle twill. No front numbers are used. Dazzle twill is used for all names and numbers. Some retail-sale versions are produced using standard, non-dazzle twill.

Thick, five-banded racing stripe trim continues down the sides and over the shoulders. The V-neck is trimmed in royal blue. On the back, three-color names and numbers—royal blue/orange/white—are applied. Numbers use the Block Standard font, while shorter names use Block Condensed and longer names use Block Extra Condensed. These names appear slightly taller than in previous years. There are no distinguishable differences between the 1988, 1989, and 1990 versions.

Button-front jerseys, last worn in 1977, return in 1991. Lettering remains in dazzle twill, and for the first time, the home jersey adopts a three-color treatment, including an almost invisible layer of dazzle white beneath the blue and orange. 1991 is the final year of the Rawlings contract. In 1992, Russell becomes the new supplier. Russell's "R" logo replaces the Rawlings script, but all other design elements remain unchanged. The William A. Shea memorial patch is added to the left sleeve of the 1992 jersey. Dazzle twill reflects light attractively, but it is notoriously difficult to customize accurately—and very few retailers or customizers are able to replicate it properly. Most retail authentic jerseys found in the hobby are incorrectly made without dazzle twill. However, this also makes it more difficult to counterfeit them convincingly.

The 1991–1992 road jersey retains the lettering style of the 1988–1990 version but switches to a button-front design. Royal blue neck trim is eliminated, so the collar is left plain. Lettering is made of ribbed dazzle twill.

The name on back is rendered in three-color Block Condensed font, with Extra Condensed used for longer names. Numbers are also three-color Block, all in royal/orange/white.

1991 is the final year of the Rawlings contract with MLB; Russell takes over in 1992. Aside from the sleeve logo change and relocation of the tagging to the outside of the left tail (from the inside), all else remains the same. The William A. Shea memorial patch is sewn on the left sleeve of the 1992 jersey.

The 1993 road jersey features a three-color "New York" script with an underline across the front. This script differs from the version used in 1987. The oversized front wordmark eliminates a buttonhole, replaced instead with a necessary Velcro fastener to secure the placket. This year only, the sleeve ends feature royal blue/orange/royal blue elastic trim. Lettering in plain, non-textured twill. Mets Skyline patch returns to the left sleeve for the first time since 1981.

Back numbers use the Block Standard; names appear in three-color Block Condensed, without nameplates. Longer names are set in Block Extra Condensed. As with the home jersey, all lettering and numbering is rendered in three colors: royal blue/orange/white.The blue used is a darker shade than pre-1993. Team tagging dicontinued.

This one-year-only style is nearly identical to the 1993 road jersey, but sharp eyes will notice that the royal blue/orange/royal blue sleeve trim has been removed, leaving plain sleeve ends. As in 1993, the oversized front wordmark eliminates a buttonhole and uses a Velcro fastener instead.

Three-color Front Block variation front numbers—royal blue/orange/white—are added for 1994. Front numbers in 1994 are noticeably larger than in any other year. All jerseys of this style include the Miracle Mets patch on the left sleeve and the MLB 125th Anniversary patch on the right. All lettering is made of non-textured twill, and the blue remains the darker shade introduced in 1993. No team tagging in 1994.

1998

This style is a throwback to the 1965–1977 home jersey, with a white outline added to all lettering, numbers, and player name on back (NOB). All lettering is in three-color royal/orange/white.

While 1998 marks the first year that black is added as an accent color on Mets white alternate jerseys—and the first appearance of black alternate jerseys—the 1998 version of the home pinstripe jersey is the only one in the lineup that remains unchanged from 1997. It does not have a black drop shadow around the lettering. The skyline patch on the sleeve is also the older style that lacks a black drop shadow on the Mets text. Black drop shadows on the patch and jersey lettering first appear in 1999.

The twill used for the lettering varies throughout the run of this style. Non-patterned twill is used in 1995–1996, and patterned glacier twill is used in 1997–1998. The name and number twill matches the wordmark fabric. Numbers appear on both the front and back. Front numbers use the Front Block variation; back numbers are in Block Standard, regardless of manufacturer. Names on back are in Block Condensed, with Block Extra Condensed used for longer names.

From 1995–1998, the Mets turn to California-based uniform maker AIS to supply their jerseys. No team tagging used. AIS jerseys never have a maker's mark sewn on the sleeve ends, as this is not contractually permitted. Notably, with the introduction of the "snow white" alternate jersey in 1997 and then the black alternate in 1998, the pinstripe home jersey is worn less and less frequently as time progresses.

Made by AIS from 1995–1997, this style is nearly identical to the 1972–1973 road jersey. The two-color "New York" wordmark on the front appears in royal blue and orange. However, unlike the earlier version, this jersey features thin royal blue knit trim on the sleeve ends, a different number font, and NOBs, which distinguishes it from the 1972–1973 model. The Skyline patch appears on the left sleeve. No year tagging. Back numbers are in Block, front numbers in the Front Block variation. NOB follows the Mets style of standard-length names in Block Condensed, and longer names in Block Extra Condensed. No nameplates are used. Standard twill is used in 1995–1996, with glacier twill used in 1997.

Although outwardly nearly identical to the 1999 jersey, several changes are noted: the Rawlings logo is embroidered in blue at the end of the left sleeve, and the Rawlings "Authentic Collection" tag is stitched inside the front left tail. The MLB silhouetted batter is now sewn to the back of the neck — in the Mets colors of blue, white, and orange. Rawlings uses gray pearl buttons on most jerseys.

The tragic events of 9/11/2001 are marked on all jerseys still in rotation after that date, by the USA flag sewn over the MLB logo on the back of the neck. The team also adds special 9/11 embroidery to the right sleeve end. In 2002, the 9/11 embroidery returns, with a Mets 40th anniversary patch sewn above it. The direct embroidery is applied by the Mets' local tailor, Stitches of Whitestone, NY.

Oddly, many of the 2000–2001 Rawlings jerseys seem to be made with flat tails — a feature not seen since Spalding used it for MLB jerseys in 1972. Flat tails are discontinued in 2002.

Numbers and name identical to Mets script lettering colors, all using drop shadow. Back numbers are Block, front numbers are Front Block variation (royal blue/orange/black drop shadow). Glacier twill is used for the top layer of all lettering, numbers and name. Player names are now in Block Condensed, even long names. The practice of regularly using Extra Condensed for longer names ceases.

The 1998 white jersey differs from the other styles used that year in that it uses a sleeve patch without a drop shadow on the word Mets. 1999 jerseys use both types of patches, some with a drop shadow and some without (right). No team tagging is used. The Russell "R" logo is embroidered on the end of the right sleeve as is contractually permitted for that maker.

The "Mets in Black" era begins in 1998, with black added as a team color. The black alternate Mets script jersey is introduced that year and, in its first season, is worn both at home and on the road. In 1998, both AIS and Russell produce sets of this jersey style. Russell jerseys are contractually permitted to display the Russell "R" logo embroidered on the right sleeve; AIS jerseys have blank sleeves. All player names are set in Block Condensed font, regardless of name length.

While black drop-shadows are added to other Mets jerseys in 1998, the classic pinstripe is spared — until 1999. A royal blue pinstripe jersey with no trim, featuring three-color lettering in glacier blue/orange/black drop-shadow. Though listed as the Mets' primary home jersey, its usage declines over time as the team prefers the snow white alternate at home and frequently wears black both at home and on the road.

AIS produces this style only in 1999, when the team goes "retro" and omits player names from all home jerseys. The players dislike the anonymity, and the experiment ends after one season. Names return in 2000. From that point forward, all names are in the same Block Condensed font, regardless of length. The skyline patch now features a barely visible black drop shadow on the Mets script.

1999 only: no NOB used

After the tragic events of 9/11/2001, the Mets added special sleeve end embroidery and a USA flag to the back of the neck. To date, I have not seen a 2001-tagged jersey in the home pinstripe style with these elements in place. My theory is that, given there were only a couple of weeks left in the season, the Mets opted not to alter this style of jerseys and wore the white and black jerseys alone until the end of the 2001 season. In 2002, both the sleeve embroidery and the 40th anniversary patch were present on Mets pinstriped jerseys.

Player names are in Block Condensed, even for long names. Names on back are used in all years.

Three makers supplied the Mets with this style jersey during its ten-year run:

– 1999: This style jersey is made exclusively by Russell. Russell "R" logo on right sleeve; no commemorative patches.

– 2000–2002: Made exclusively by Rawlings.

– 2003–2009: Made exclusively by Majestic.

2000

This 2001 John Franco jersey, offered on an auction site, was the only example I could find of this style jersey with 9-11 embroidery. A survey of press photos of the Mets from post–9/11 through the end of the season—a period of less than three weeks—reveals no images of the team wearing this style of jersey. It seems reasonable that it is authentic—given the dead-on accuracy of the embroidery work—and the front captain "C," which was done in this ornate style only in 2001 as far as I can tell.

2002

2000–2002: This style made exclusively by Rawlings. Oddly, these Rawlings jerseys seem to all be made with flat tails, generally a feature that is added only when players request it.

- 2000: Rawlings logo on the left sleeve beneath the Mets disk patch. No patch is worn on the right sleeve, and no commemorative patches are used. MLB Silhouetted Batter patch is added to the back of the neck as a running change.
- 2001: Rawlings logo on the left sleeve beneath the Mets disk patch. No patch is worn on the right sleeve until after 9/11, when 9-11 embroidery and a USA flag patch are added to the back of the neck on all jerseys in circulation.
- 2002: Rawlings logo on the left sleeve beneath the Mets disk patch. Mets 40th Anniversary patch and 9-11 embroidery are added to the right sleeve.

Above and top right: While both of these jerseys are from 2004, the jersey at left was retired/sold to fans before the Bob Murphy embroidery was added to the left sleeve late in the season. During these years, the Mets began making many extra sets of jerseys—presumably for planned sale to collectors—as jerseys appear to have been worn only briefly before being sold.

This style is made exclusively by Majestic during its six-year run. The Majestic logo is embroidered in white on the left sleeve. No memorial patches are used, except for 2004.

Memorial patches for 2004:

– "Ya Gotta Believe TUG" black embroidery is placed below the Shea Stadium 40th Anniversary patch.

– "BOB MURPHY" embroidery, arched above the Skyline patch on the left sleeve, is added to all uniforms in use after August 3.

2010-2011 Home Cream Pinstripe

For 2010, the Mets announced that they were introducing a new “retro” home jersey—a pin-striped design in cream-colored Cool Base fabric. The bright white uniforms once again became designated as their home alternate uniforms.

The change was a step toward tradition, but the continued use of black drop shadows on the team script, player name, and number undercut the retro aesthetic. It felt like a collision of 1960s and 1990s styles—an odd choice for a uniform introduced in the 2010s.

The Mets’ “Skyline” sleeve patch appears without a drop shadow.

Just in time for the team's 50th anniversary, the Mets return to basics and finally eliminate all the dated black drop shadowing from their home, road, and home alternate jerseys. All blue accessories return as well, including hats and undershirts.

The blue-pinstripe jersey retains the cream-colored Cool Base fabric introduced in 2010.

In both 2012 and 2013, the Skyline sleeve patch is replaced with commemorative patches. The Skyline patch returns for 2014.

The road gray jersey also returns to its roots for 2012, losing the black drop shadowing that had adorned both the front wordmark and all of the player name and number lettering. All lettering is now blue/orange. No nameplates are used. The team switches back to regular, non-pattern twill, moving away from the Glacier-style twill they had been using since 1997. Except for being made of Cool Base fabric, it is practically identical in appearance to the 1995–1997 road jersey. The Skyline sleeve patch is replaced in both 2012 and 2013 with commemorative patches. The Skyline patch returns for 2014. In 2023, the team disc changes sides based on the player's handedness, and an ad patch is added. Originally made by Majestic, the jersey's manufacture is taken over by Nike in 2020. 2012-2014 Alternate Home White

2012

As part of the 2012 50th anniversary redesign, the “Snow White” home alternate jersey also loses all traces of the black drop shadowing that had defined it since 1998. Except for being made of Cool Base fabric, it is practically identical in appearance to the one-year 1997 home alternate jersey.

The Skyline sleeve patch is replaced in 2012 and 2013 with special patches: the 50th Anniversary Skyline patch and the All-Star Game patch, respectively. The Skyline patch returns in 2014. Player names and numbers on the back are in two-color twill—blue and orange. No nameplates are used. The team switches back to regular, non-pattern twill, moving away from the Glacier-style twill they had been using since 1999.

The popular white jersey is dropped before the start of the 2015 season, and as a result, the pinstriped jersey again becomes white instead of cream-colored.

2015 World Series

Closely resembling the team's 1995–1997 road batting practice jersey, this blue road alternate jersey features "New York" in the team's characteristic road jersey font in plain (not patterned) gray twill outlined with orange. Thin orange knit trim is sewn on the placket and near the sleeve ends. All player names and numbers—front and back—are also in gray/orange.

The All-Star Game patch is on the left sleeve for 2013, and Mr. Met replaces it for the 2014 season. In 2017, the Mr. Met sleeve patch is replaced by the team disc patch. The Mets tweak their home jersey slightly for the 2015 season, changing the base color of the blue-pinstriped jersey from cream to white. Other elements remain the same. 2016 Alternate Home "1986" Nostalgia

Stephen Kraijic Collection

Honoring the 30th anniversary of their 1986 World Series victory, the Mets introduce a throwback to that year in their regular jersey rotation for 2016. The jersey is a very convincing replica of the 1986 racing-stripe pullovers, down to the nameplates on the back. This version of the Flex Base template omits the usual side vent feature, replaced by the orange/royal blue/orange stripes. The look is capped off by the period-appropriate 25th anniversary patch worn by the Mets in 1986.

2016 Flex Base Jersey Construction

Read the full story on MLB's adoption of Flex Base jerseys for 2016 in Chapter 2.

n 2016, all teams adopt Majestic's new "Flex Base" on-field game jerseys, which are made of Cool Base fabric, but with several new elements designed to make them lighter and more breathable. The new jerseys have mesh side panels that run the length of the jersey, and one on the back tail called the "Air Belt." They also use "Kiss Cut" layering for front decorations, names, and numbers, which Majestic says is 10–20% lighter than traditional layered twill. Finally, the MLB logo on the back neck is now a rubberized patch called "CFX," introduced by Majestic, and the heat-pressed tag on the front tail differs from previous Cool Base jerseys.

2022-2023 Alternate Home Black

After surprising fans with a slightly different black jersey in 2021, the Mets make this black jersey an official alternate starting for the 2022 season. This black Nike Flex Base jersey has royal knit trim above the sleeve openings only, unlike the 2021 version which also featured trim around the neck and placket. It features the standard Mets skyline logo patch (rather than the "blackout" version used a decade ago) on the left sleeve. All lettering, front and back, is Varsity royal/white/orange drop shadow and is plain twill, not the old-style, patterned glacier twill that was used previously. In 2023, team disc changes sides based on the player's handedness, and an ad patch is added.

2024 Nike “Vapor Premiere Elite” Jersey Template

Nike Flex Base 2020–2023

Nike Vapor Premier Elite 2024

Following league-wide sweeping changes to MLB jerseys, all teams switch from Nike’s 2020–2023 continuation of the Majestic Flex Base jersey shell to its new Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template. The jerseys of the 2024 season become an anomaly—a “one-and-done” season of changes that brings intense scrutiny from players and fans alike. Based on the negative feedback, especially from MLB players, Nike rolls back some—but not all—of the 2024 changes in time for the 2025 season.

The full rundown of the changes is outlined earlier in “The Basics” chapter, but generally speaking, 2024’s crop of jerseys differs from earlier versions in several key ways:

- VPE home jerseys are off-white or light cream in color. The earlier Flex Base white jerseys are a bright, purer white. Grays are standardized.
- The front placket is narrower on VPE, which often causes team wordmark lettering that crosses the placket to break differently.
- Neck and sleeve trim elements (when used) are no longer sewn on top of the jersey material, but are now sewn into the jersey at the seams. Placket trim remains, but the trim is now spaced more tightly due to the narrower placket width.
- For improved visibility, the MLB logo on the back of the jersey is moved several inches lower from the collar placket area where it had been since 2000.
- VPE loses the integrated mesh side and back tail panels that had been part of the Flex Base jersey template.
- Player names on VPE are much smaller, and for many teams are done in a standardized block font, all using a much steeper, nearly semi-circular arch.
- For teams with front numbers, the new 2024 font is simply a reduced version of the back numbers. This differs from past practice, where front numbers were typically a bolder, wider variant.
- Team logo sleeve patches—and in some cases sponsor sleeve patches—change from traditional raised embroidery to flat printed plastic or sublimated cloth or twill.
- All lettering is done using a new, more lightweight (thinner) kind of matte-finished twill (commonly called “Nike Twill”). Most, but not all, jerseys incorporate barely visible micro-perforation on the numbers, front and back.
- Universally, nameplates are no longer used.

2024 Home

The switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of changes to the Mets' classic home jersey. The most visible change is the league-wide reduction in the size of back names and numbers, with the name lettering now arched more prominently. VPE has a narrower placket than Flex Base, so the team's front lettering now splits the "e" across the placket, rather than between the "M" and "e" as before. The team does not use perforated numbers on these jerseys. In 2024, the Mets start the season with a memorial patch for Mets Hall of Famer Buddy Harrelson, located above the team disc. On June 29, they honor Jerry Grote by combining his and Harrelson's memorials into a single patch above the team disc, and also add a memorial "24" patch in memory of Willie Mays on the opposite sleeve, above the sponsor patch.

In advance of the 2024 season, the Mets adjust their popular black alternate jersey, which was reintroduced in 2021, modified in 2022, and updated again for 2024. This version removes the white layers from all lettering and changes the orange drop shadow into a standard orange layer, making all lettering blue/orange. Meanwhile, the switch to Nike's Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) results in a handful of other changes. The most visible change is the league-wide rescaling of the back names and numbers, making them smaller, and arching the name lettering more prominently. Sleeve-end trim is also now sewn in to the end of the sleeves rather than sewn on top of it, which makes the band of blue appear wider. 2024-2025 City Connect

The Mets introduce their City Connect jersey in 2024, and unlike some other teams that use their "city" jersey to represent a state or region, the Mets focus solely on New York City for inspiration. Symbolic elements of the design include:

- The gray uniform is inspired by New York City's concrete, while the jersey's pinstripes are made up of circles and diamonds, representing New York City's local and express subway lines.
- The purple color used as an accent pays homage to the city subway's 7-Line, which connects to Citi Field.
- The letters "NYC" across the front are meant to pay tribute to the entire city, not just Queens.
- The sleeve patch is designed to evoke a New York City subway token.
- Player names on the back are written in the Tuscan font that the Mets have historically only used on the fronts of their road jerseys.
- Near the bottom of the uniform top is a purple inscription reading "The World's City" representing the diversity of New York City

Because this jersey premiered in 2024, it exists only in the Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template. Despite that fact, it appears that the sleeve trim is sewn on to the jersey rather than sewn in to the sleeve, perhaps because of its width and intricate pattern. Back numbers are perforated. In 2024, the Mets start the season with a memorial patch for Mets Hall of Famer Buddy Harrelson, located above the team disc. On June 29, they add a memorial to Jerry Grote by creating a single patch with the Harrelson and Grote memorials above the team disc, and on the same day, add a memorial "24" patch in memory of Willie Mays on the opposite sleeve, above the sponsor patch. Carryover City Connect jerseys are not updated in 2025, despite the updates to the team's other jerseys for the 2025 season.

2025 Home

The 2025 season brings minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams' non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back names and numbers are enlarged— in most cases, back to 2023 sizes— and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, replacing the printed or lightweight embroidered patches used in 2024. The 2025 version of this jersey also features the Ed Kranepool memorial "7" patch above the team disc. Note also the use of the white Nike jock-tag on front, one of a handful of uses of this new tag, which is typically black and shows easily through white pants.

2025 Road

The Mets update their road jersey for 2025, after using the prior version on the VPE template for only one season. They remove the trim around the neck and placket and replace it with neck trim in blue/orange/blue. Matching blue/orange/blue sleeve-end trim also replaces the blue-only trim of the last version. This jersey also incorporates the other league-wide changes to road gray jerseys for 2025. The 2024 VPE gray jerseys experienced noticeable sweat-staining during games, so 2025 gray jerseys revert back to the same base fabric used for Flex Base, but applied to the VPE template (no mesh side panels or “Air Belt” back panel). Other pre-2024 elements return, including neck and sleeve trim being sewn onto the jerseys again rather than sewn in. Back names and numbers are enlarged— in most cases, back to 2023 sizes— and perforated numbers are gone. The “New York” lettering appears larger than in 2024, though this is difficult to confirm without examining the jersey in hand. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, replacing printed or lightweight embroidered patches. The 2025 version of this jersey also has the Ed Kranepool memorial “7” patch above the team disc.

2025 Alternate Road

The Mets introduce a new blue road alternate for 2025, replacing the previous blue alternate worn since 2013. The new entry is inspired by past Mets looks. It is a pullover like their 1980s jerseys, with blue/orange/blue sewn-in neck and sleeve trim. The VPE pullover template has an unusual “notch” in the collar, making it more of a “Y” neck than a “V” neck. The trim follows the neck opening into this odd notch. The team’s “New York” script is revived here, having last appeared on the road jerseys in 1987. All lettering front and back is blue/orange, creating an outline effect on the same-color blue jersey base. Even though the jersey is new, it also incorporates the other minor modifications to elements of the VPE template across all teams’ non-gray jerseys, a step toward more comprehensive changes to come for the 2026 season. Among them, back name and numbers are enlarged, in most cases, back to 2023 sizes, and perforated numbers are gone. Sleeve patches also revert to full embroidery, back from printed or lightweight embroidered patches. The 2025 version of this jersey also has the Ed Kranepool memorial “7” patch above the team disc.

Although intended solely for road use, it is worn at home (with white pants typically worn with black jerseys) on June 26, 2025. This marks the first instance of the team wearing a jersey with “New York” at home in its history, excluding special Negro League–tribute games and the 9/11 20th anniversary game played in 2021.played in 2021.

2025 City Connect

The Mets bring back their City Connect jerseys, introduced just one year before, for 2025. League-wide, Nike has not prioritized making the same updates to most City Connect styles for 2025 as it has for other types of jerseys. Though it is hard to tell from game photos, it is likely that these jerseys are exactly the same as they were in 2024, including small, heavily arched player name lettering and perforated back numbers—though more research is needed to confirm this. The 2025 version of this jersey has the Ed Kranepool memorial “7” patch above the team disc.

Mets Jerseys Demoted to the Minor Leagues

Like all MLB teams have done for decades, MLB equipment that has been used in the "bigs" gets sent to the minor leagues for more service when its MLB service is through. Never is this more apparent than on road jerseys that originally bore the name of the big club's city: these are not useful in the minors unless the city name is stripped and replaced with the club team name, or in some cases the name of the minor league city. I have restored many Mets jerseys that have passed through the minor league system. For example in 1974, of the Mets' six minor league clubs, three were named "Mets". These jerseys went to one of these before ending up in the hands of collectors. These photos and the attached linked documents show the restoration process.

A typical Dream Shop jersey Restoration: The light table and photo-enhancement techniques can show us what was once on the jersey, even though it has been washed dozens of times since the original lettering has been removed. How? The old lettering las left its mark, through a combination of left-behind adhesive, thicker fabric beneath the original lettering due to less washing abrasion, and different fading from uneven exposure to sunlight. Additionally, points of intersection of the old lettering, usually in the corners of the letters reveal tiny holes where overlapped stitching caused stress to the fabric especially when lettering was hurriedly removed. Using original patterns gleaned from scanning surviving original examples, the new lettering is trued to match the ghosts, layer stitched with element-matching bleached thread, then media blasted with a fine abrasive to remove the sheen from the lettering, then organically dyed to simulate the patina of years of use. Look at the image to the left that shows how the replacement "NEW YORK" matches the original 33 sewn below it.

Mets Jerseys Made for the Minor Leagues

Like most teams, the Mets have a farm team system with several teams named after the parent club. And while MLB hand-me-downs are frequently gifted to these clubs, they also order their own gear, as there is just not enough of the MLB jerseys to go around. I frequently see Mets minor league jerseys represented as MLB-issued when they are not. To distinguish them, look for differences in trim and especially in manufacturers, which often differ from those contracted to outfit the major league club.

On this page are some examples on jerseys that were made for minor league Mets clubs.

Tagging sewn inside back tail

Left: A respected dealer in the hobby offered a large number of these white mesh jerseys for sale, noting them as "2010 Spring Training jerseys." They are actually from the Mets' Minor League camp at Spring Training. Their use continued through at least 2012. Note the name on the back, in one-color instead of the regular season three-color, and the fact that it is sewn on a nameplate to make it easier for the team to apply--and remove--from these probably frequently reissued garments.

Right: I'd love to have had the chance to examine this Mets "Tides" MiLB jersey...my instincts tell me it might have been a 1960s MLB Mets road jersey in an earlier life. I'll likely never know.

Batting Practice and Spring Training Jerseys

1981-1986 Home Batting Practice

V-neck is rounder 1981–1985, sharper in 1986

1981 is the first year the Mets are issued team BP jerseys. From 1981–1983, the home BP jersey features a royal blue solid (non-mesh) body, with orange/white/orange sleeve and neck trim, using block numbers with serifs. These are easily mistaken by collectors for the 1983 home alternate jersey. Note that names on the back are not used on BP jerseys through 1994. Unlike the BP jersey, the home alternate has a name on the back, is made of a heavier fabric, and features sewn-in team year/set tagging inside the collar—features the BP jersey lacks.The fabric changes to mesh from 1984–1986. Lettering remains orange/white. Block Standard numbers are used from 1984–1986.

1981-1986 Road Batting Practice

1981 (solid fabric); note use of Block with Serifs numbers in 1981–1983

Predicting a common future marketing trend, the Mets also have a road version of their batting practice jersey from the very beginning, starting in 1981.

From 1981–1983, the road variation of the BP jersey is made of royal blue solid (non-mesh) lightweight fabric, with orange/gray/orange trim at the sleeve ends and neck. The fabric changes to mesh for 1984–1986.

1984 (mesh fabric)

All lettering and numbers are gray/orange. Block-with-serifs numbers are used from 1981–1983, with regular Block numbers used from 1984–1986, coinciding with the switch to mesh jerseys. This style looks nearly identical to the road alternate game jersey used from 1983–1984, but that jersey includes names on back and is made of a heavier, solid (non-mesh) fabric. No names are used on Mets batting practice jerseys of this era.

1982 Alternate Road Batting Practice

Relatively uncommon, these are one-year-only, solid knit (not mesh) light-weight royal blue jerseys. The outlines around the numbers and the NY logo are gray, just like the trim used on Mets road alternate and road BP jerseys of the 1980s. Examples are known to have been made by both Rawlings and Russell.

This version "NY" batting practice jersey features no trim on sleeve ends or V-neck.

No names on back. Numbers appear on both the front and back. Rawlings back numbers are in Block style; front numbers use the Front Block variation. Russell uses Varsity numbers on both front and back.

1983 Alternate Road Batting Practice

This also appears to be an alternate BP jersey, though it is unclear whether this was a mid-season change for all players or if both styles were used concurrently. Orange/gray/orange neck and sleeve end trim. Made of a light-weight solid fabric (not mesh). No number on the front. On the back, two-color block numbers—gray/orange—are used. No name on back.

1985-1991 Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

Jackets or jerseys? We include them here, as they are short-sleeved and customized for each player. These pullover, zipper-neck satin-fabric BP jerseys made by Starter appear in photographs from 1985 through 1991. They feature the Mets' skyline patch on the left sleeve and multi-striped sleeve trim. They have several odd characteristics. The "NY" logo on the front is in a deep pile chenille-style embroidery. No numbers appear on the back. However, tall, thin, oddly shaped numbers—unlike the Mets' standard font—are sewn high on the right sleeve. This sleeve number font appears to be exclusive to Starter.

Players' names are embroidered directly across the upper back in small, straight-line lettering (under 2" tall). The font resembles a two-color Varsity Light.

1987-1992 Home Batting Practice

The 1987 BP jersey features shoulder top trim that is even more garish than that of their game jerseys. Trim appears only on the sleeves, unlike the game jerseys where it runs down the sides.

The BP sleeve trim consists of five stripes, compared to the three-stripe trim on game jerseys. It is a complex five-banded white/orange/royal blue/orange/white pattern. Lettering and numbers are orange/white. NOBs are not used. Back numbers are Block style; front numbers are the Front Block variant.

On game-spec models, the Majestic sleeve logo is embroidered. On retail models, like this one, it is a rubbery heat-pressed decal

This road BP jersey mirrors the design of the new 1988 road game jersey. It is made of royal blue mesh fabric and features even more complex seven-striped sleeve tops: white/gray/orange/royal blue/orange/gray/white.

The front features "NEW YORK" in simple three-color block letters. Only numbers appear on the back; no names are used. Lettering is in three-color gray/orange/white.

1993-1994 Alternate Batting Practice Zip-Neck

This is the only such jersey in this style we have come across. It is the alternate two-pocket zip-neck jersey from Majestic, branded “The Gamewarmer.” Majestic made these available to every team as an alternate BP jersey. While some teams used them, most did not. In some cases, individual players received them.

These have an elastic waist that causes them to ride up on the wearer whenever arms are raised, and most players considered them uncomfortable. We have found no photos of Mets players wearing this style, which was part of the Majestic Diamond Collection of on-field wear.

The 1993–1994 home BP jersey copies the style of the 1993–1994 home jersey, featuring a very fat version of the Mets script with an underline.

The 1993 version features only the Skyline patch on the left sleeve. In 1994, it is replaced with the Mets' 25th Anniversary of the Miracle Mets patch on the left, and the MLB 125th Anniversary patch on the right.

Numbers on the front are Front Block Variant; back numbers are Block. All two-color (orange/white). No names on back.

This style of BP jersey was used for several more years by Mets minor league teams. These Minor League jerseys usually have Rawlings tags.

1993 Road Batting Practice

This one-year style is used only for road games in 1993. The front features the same "New York" script as the 1993 road game jersey. It is made of shiny royal blue micromesh fabric. The Mets skyline patch is sewn on the left sleeve. No number appears on the front; no name appears on the back.

The back features a two-color Block number in orange/white. These are very hard to find.

This is another one-year-only road batting practice jersey for the Mets. This version features a more ornate "New York" wordmark in gray/orange/white, along with front and back numbers. Back numbers are Block style; front numbers use the Front Block variation. No names appear on the back. The lettering is thick and bold, making it difficult to read.

This jersey was worn with the 25th Anniversary of the Miracle Mets patch on the left sleeve in 1994. It appears that these were recycled for Spring Training use only in 1995, with the anniversary patch replaced by the Mets' familiar Skyline patch. Game-worn examples are very hard to come by. There may have been two sets of these—one with the Skyline patch and one with the 1994 25th Anniversary patch.

Nearly indistinguishable from the 1998–2002 alternate home black game jersey, the batting practice jersey lacks the game jersey's royal blue knit trim on the front placket and at the sleeve ends.

Lettered identically to the home black alternate jerseys, with names and numbers in three-color royal/white/orange drop shadow.

These jerseys are button-front mesh in 1998–1999, then switch to shiny button-front micro-mesh around 2000. Retail "Authentic"-tagged black mesh BP jerseys were also sold in a pullover version. However, the team did not wear these—at least not at the Major League level.

The 1998 jersey features the regular Mets Skyline patch on the sleeve, while the 1999–2002 versions use the new Midnight Skyline patch.

Player names appear on the back of these BP jerseys—except in 1999, when names were dropped at home for one season only. Beginning in 1998, the Mets use Block Condensed in three-color for all player NOBs, including very long ones.

These blue BP jerseys were worn by the Mets during Spring Training road games in 1998. In 1998, black became the Mets' new primary color across the board. However, the team retained a blue road batting practice jersey as part of the uniform lineup.

It is nearly identical to the 1995–1997 version, except that all lettering now features black drop shadows in keeping with the updated style. Lettering consists of gray over orange with a black drop shadow. The gray twill uses a Glacier pattern.

In 1998, the Mets' regular skyline patch—without a drop shadow—is sewn on the left sleeve. In 1999, the sleeve patch is updated to include a black drop shadow.These blue jerseys are discontinued after the 1999 season, as all BP jerseys shift to black..

For a single year, as the Mets began their transition into the “Mets in Black” era, the team retained their traditional blue batting practice jerseys but added an almost invisible black drop shadow to all lettering.

2007-2010 Batting Practice

In 2007, the Mets switch to lightweight Cool Base batting practice jerseys, along with all other MLB teams. The jerseys resemble the team's 2005–2006 batting practice design but lack a front number. Contrasting orange and black side panels are integrated into the design.

All lettering and designs are single-layer heat-pressed appliqués. Note the very narrow white outline around the orange numbers and player name—an addition introduced in 2007.

© GameWornGuides.com

2011 Batting Practice

All of MLB's batting practice jerseys change for 2011, becoming button-front designs. Side panel trim changes to solid black, replacing the black-and-orange combination used in 2010.

Player numbers are added to the front in 2011, with names and numbers continuing on the back. No sleeve patch is used. All lettering is now three-color—black/white with an orange drop shadow. The white outline around the orange drop shadow from the prior year disappears. Since 2007, the team logo script has been a heat-applied appliqué rather than sewn tackle twill. However, in 2011 all lettering returns to tackle twill.

This is a one-year style, as the Mets eliminate drop shadows after 2011 as part of a minor redesign that removes black as a team color.

Read the full story on MLB's new for 2016 Spring Training Jerseys in Chapter 8.

2016 Spring Training

In 2016, MLB introduces a Spring Training–specific jersey intended for preseason workouts and games. The jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template and features a special printed twill—decorated with "2016" and Spring Training symbols—as the main twill layer for every team.

The Mets use their regular-season blue home alternate as the base for their Spring Training jersey. The name and back numbers are in orange patterned twill with white outlines. Front numbers are the standard orange/white.

The jersey also features a rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve—styled like an Interstate highway sign—reading "2016" and "FL" to represent the Mets' Spring Training location.

© GameWornGuides.com

2017 Spring Training

Spring Training–only jerseys return for all teams in 2017 with minor design updates. As in 2016, the jersey is based on the Flex Base game jersey template. It features special printed twill decorated with “2017” and Spring Training symbols. However, all teams now use the same twill: single-color white with gray printing, replacing the team-specific versions from the year before.

The Mets once again use their regular-season blue home alternate as the base for their Spring Training jersey, replacing last year’s Mr. Met sleeve patch with a team disc—consistent with the change made to the alternate jersey in 2017. The name and back numbers are rendered in white patterned twill. Front numbers are the standard orange/white, as used in the regular season. The jersey features a recolored version of the rubberized CFX patch on the right sleeve, styled like an Interstate highway sign, reading “2017” and “FL” to represent the Mets’ Spring Training location.

With many players opting for lightweight cage jackets, which are devoid of player identification, instead of traditional BP jerseys with player names and numbers, Majestic introduces a replacement product that may be an attempt to gain acceptance by the pros on field while being more attractive to fans at retail. New for 2017, official team batting practice jerseys are replaced with what Majestic calls a 3/4 Sleeve Trainer. The new hybrid is cut in a pullover jacket silhouette, including a short zipper at the neck, but made of Cool Base mesh, like the sides and tail of Flex Base jerseys. Numbers are in what Majestic calls "lightweight twill" (as described in Chapter 8). The Majestic logo is applied to the middle of the left sleeve, and a new, heat-pressed Cool Base tag adorns the left front tail. The Mets jersey is royal blue with royal blue back with orange underarm gussets. Their classic "Mets" script appears on the front left chest in orange/white. Player number in orange/white block on left sleeve and back of jersey in 2017, on sleeve only thereafter.

2018 Spring Training

Giampiero Berardi Collection

The 2018 Spring Training jerseys continue the general design of the previous year, again featuring player names and numbers in each team's regular fonts, but using a single layer of twill printed with Spring Training and 2018-specific patterns.

The Mets use their regular-season blue home alternate as their base. The name and back numbers are sewn on in white patterned twill. Front numbers are the standard orange/white, as used in the regular season. A new CFX patch—shaped like home plate—is stitched to the right sleeve, featuring "2018" and "FL" to represent their Spring Training home.

© GameWornGuides.com

2019 Spring Training

The 2019 Spring Training jersey evolves to create yet another iteration of the template of the last three years. This time, jersey backs abandon the single-color printed twill treatment of the past and return to regular season multi-layered team-color twill like 2016, but without 2016's sublimated twill patterns. The Mets use their regular-season blue home alternate, adding a new CFX plastic patch on the right sleeve, featuring "2019" and "FLA," referencing their Spring Training home. The player name and front and back numbers are orange/white.

© GameWornGuides.com

2020-2023 Spring Training

Spring Training is simplified league-wide in 2020. For the first time since 2016, Spring Training jerseys eliminate the sleeve patch indicating the year and location of each team's training site, and use the same non-patterned, multi-layered twill as worn during the regular season—making many teams' spring jerseys identical to their regular-season alternates.

For 2020–2023, the Mets use their regular-season blue home alternate with orange/white name and front and back numbers.

1990 St. Patrick's Day

- Because St. Patrick's Day falls during Spring Training, when media coverage is light. Though photos aren't available for every year, the Mets have been regular participants in the wearing o' the green.
- In 1990, the team not only wore green mesh jerseys, but also debuted green and orange (ugh) racing stripe–style pants for the occasion.
- Complete 1990 uniforms appear for sale more than occasionally, suggesting they were all auctioned off at season's end.

The Mets' first Turn Back the Clock game, held on August 30, 1992, was billed as a "Nostalgia Game," featuring the 1962 Mets against the 1969 Cincinnati Reds. Both teams wore Rawlings double knit replicas of their flannel uniforms from those years.

A Rawlings "glued-on" appliqué logo (inset) is applied to the left sleeve—a style typically found on minor league uniforms. There are no front numbers, as was standard in 1962. However, the Skyline sleeve patch—which was not used in 1962—incorrectly appears on the Nostalgia jersey. The front script appears to be sewn slightly too high.

Stephen Kraljic Collection

In 2002 the Mets called on Rawlings to make reproductions of their 1986 uniforms for use in games on July 15-16 vs. the Florida Marlins, who did not exist in 1986. The quality of these Rawlings reproductions is pretty good, but Mets purists have some issues. First, the jersey is missing the 1986 sleeve patch. Secondly, there is a discrepancy with the way the pinstripes align with the shoulder seams. Mets-style jerseys always have their pinstripes vertical all the way to the shoulder racing stripes. These have raglan-style sleeves; the pinstripe that runs across the top of the shoulder is a trait of Yankee jerseys. Note the tiny Rawlings logo on the left sleeve end.

2004-2006 Negro Leagues Tributes (1940s New York Cubans)

2004 with felt lettering

2005 with twill lettering

The Mets appeared in Negro League tribute road games, as the New York Cubans of the Negro National League, wearing nearly identical uniforms made by AIS in 2004, 2005, and 2006—representing (we believe) the 1944 and 1945 New York Cubans teams.

The 2004 version uses all felt lettering, while the 2005 and 2006 versions feature twill lettering. These uniforms were worn on June 13, 2004 against the Kansas City Royals (Monarchs); July 9, 2005 against the Pittsburgh Pirates (Crawfords); and August 11, 2006 against the Washington Nationals (Grays).

Majestic made these near-perfect replicas of the Mets' 1986 home uniforms, marking the 20th anniversary of their World Championship season. Aside from the slightly wide side racing stripe trim, the uniform is quite accurate.

The games were held on August 19–20, 2006, against the Colorado Rockies, who did not exist in 1986. The Rockies wore their standard road grays.

Note that the MLB collar logo does not appear on game-worn versions. It appears on later retail versions.

2012 Hispanic Heritage

This jersey is worn twice in 2012, on July 6 and August 24. This marks the second year that this style of Hispanic Heritage jersey is worn. However, this time, all lettering is in white/ orange, reversing the previous year's colors.

In 2012, the 50th Anniversary patch appears on the left sleeve, and the Gary Carter KID/8 memorial is on the right.

2012 Turn Back the Clock to 1989

The Padres host a 1989 Turn Back the Clock game on August 3 and dress the Mets in replica 1989 road uniforms, complete with wide, five-striped trim on pants, jersey sides, and shoulders, and three-color blue/orange/white lettering throughout. The “NEW YORK” front wordmark is newspaper-headline plain, and the Gary Carter 8/KID memorial patch is sewn to the right sleeve.

As we’ve come to expect, players wear these uniforms two sizes larger than their 1989 counterparts would have deemed acceptable, though a few players wear their pants cuffed high to show their blue socks. The NOB font on back is slightly too wide compared to what was used in 1989.

2013 Turn Back the Clock to 1993

Stephen Kraljic Collection

On April 16, 2013, the Mets visited the Rockies for a Turn Back the Clock game commemorating Colorado's very first game—also against the Mets—on April 5, 1993. In a twist, the Rockies asked the Mets to wear their home uniforms from 1993, while the Rockies wore 1993 road uniforms for the game in Colorado.

To the Rockies' everlasting credit, they were still wearing the same home uniforms twenty years after their inaugural season—the only change being the addition of front numbers.

The Mets' 1993 pinstriped uniforms were a short-lived style (1993–1994) that featured an oversized Mets wordmark with an underline. All adornment features three colors: blue, orange, and white. The Majestic reproductions of the Mets' uniforms are highly accurate.

All teams in Major League Baseball wear camouflage-accented uniforms on May 27, 2013, to honor servicemen and women. Playing at home that day, the Mets modify their cream-colored pinstriped home jersey by replacing all blue twill with desert camo. The 2013 All-Star Game patch is sewn on the left sleeve.

2014

For the 2013 Hispanic Heritage game, the team reverses the colors used in the prior year—using an orange body with blue knit trim and blue/white lettering—but otherwise follows the same layout as 2012. The 2013 version (worn July 24 and August 24) has the All-Star Game patch on the left sleeve. The 2014 version (worn July 29 and September 12) features Mr. Met on the left sleeve, and both the Frank Cashen and Ralph Kiner memorial patches on the right.

2014 Memorial Day

Again playing at home on Memorial Day—May 26, 2014—the Mets this time choose to modify their snow-white home alternate uniforms for use in the MLB-wide promotion. As in the previous year, all blue lettering is replaced with desert camouflage twill. The left sleeve features only the Ralph Kiner memorial patch.

2014-2015 Negro Leagues Tributes (1905 Brooklyn Royal Giants)

The Mets visited Pittsburgh on June 28, 2014, for the Pirates' annual Negro Leagues tribute, and faced the Braves on June 20, 2015, in a similar event. Both games, the Mets wore unique AIS-made solid royal blue uniforms representing the Brooklyn Royal Giants (1905–1942).

Above: 2014 tag with set tag,
Left: 2015 edition did not have small set tag. Otherwise the jerseys are identical.

The uniforms are made of knit fabric, with all lettering sewn on in orange felt rather than twill. The Royal Giants were named after the Brooklyn Royal Café, owned by their founder John Conner.

2015 Memorial Day

For Memorial Day on May 25, the Mets return to the same basic design as their 2013 jersey. This time, the base pinstriped jersey is white instead of cream, and the usual Mets team disc replaces the All-Star patch seen in 2013. The MLB Silhouetted Batter neck tag is changed to dark green/khaki/white rather than its typical colors. As with the 2013 model, all blue twill is replaced with desert camouflage on the wordmark, player name, and numbers, front and back.

2015 Independence Day

For Independence Day 2015, all 29 U.S.-based teams adopt patriotic "Stars and Stripes" uniforms for the first time. For this day, all uniforms are re-lettered in a combination of red, white, and blue—regardless of the team's normal color palette. Jersey trim and patches remain the same as on the team's standard jerseys. All teams sport a stars and stripes version of the MLB Silhouetted Batter logo on the back collar.

The Mets wear their road gray jerseys with the blue-background version of the starred twill, which features large white stars. All lettering is outlined in red, including the front logo as well as the front and back numbers. Player names on back are in red. An American flag patch is sewn on the right sleeve.

All teams wear special pink-trimmed uniforms on Mother's Day—May 8, 2016, and May 13–14, 2017. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the pink MLB Mother's Day ribbon on the left chest (a carryover from past Mother's Days), while the Majestic sleeve logo is rendered in pink, and the MLB Silhouetted Batter patch on the back of the collar appears in dark pink/light pink/white.

The Mets wear their road gray jerseys with the front logo lettering in pink with dark gray outlines. Player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are pink/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of pink, gray, and white. All jersey trim, normally blue, becomes dark gray.

2016 Memorial Day

The 2016 Memorial Day jerseys are constructed in the Flex Base style for the first time, and the ChromaFlex MLB logo at the back of the neck is rendered in black and dark gold for all teams. The new league-wide template—with higher-visibility woodland camo lettering and black outlines—makes this set more legible than in prior years.

The Mets apply the camouflage trimmings to their home jerseys for the game on May 30. The front lettering, as well as the front and back numbers, is rendered in woodland camo with a black outline, and player names appear in single-color black. As with other teams, the Mets' sleeve patches are reduced to shades of green, gray, and black.

All teams wear special light blue-trimmed uniforms for Father's Day—June 19, 2016, and June 17–18, 2017. All jerseys are of Flex Base construction, with the rubberized tag applied to the front left tail. Every team also features the light blue MLB Father's Day ribbon on the left chest (a carryover from past Father's Days), while the MLB Silhouetted Batter patch on the back of the collar appears in dark royal blue/light blue/white.

The Mets wear their home jerseys with the front logo lettering in light blue with dark gray outlines. Player names on back are rendered in single-color dark gray, while front and back numbers are light blue/dark gray. The team's sleeve patches are also simplified to shades of light blue, gray, and white.

2016 Negro Leagues Tribute (1905 Brooklyn Royal Giants)

Derek Damian collection

In a June 25 road game against the Braves, the Mets throw back to the 1905 Brooklyn Royal Giants of the Negro Leagues for the third time in as many seasons, while the Braves wear uniforms representing the Negro League Atlanta Black Crackers.

These jerseys are essentially duplicates of the previous two throwbacks by AIS. This royal blue Majestic knit jersey features all-orange lettering in old-school felt, along with wide orange sleeve trim and the Royal Giants patch on the left sleeve. The Majestic logo is moved to the right sleeve, as the braiding and patch leave little room on the left.

2016 Independence Day

MLB creates yet another Independence Day jersey template for the 2016 iteration, now built on Majestic's new Flex Base jersey construction. Each jersey includes a ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" MLB logo appliqué sewn on the back of the neck.

The Mets wear their standard home jersey. All clubs choose between two styles of star-spangled lettering twill, and the Mets select the red twill version with blue outlines for their front lettering and both front and back numbers. Player names on back are blue. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve.

New for 2016, team sleeve patches are now embroidered in red, white, and blue—replacing team colors.

2016 Turn Back the Clock to 1986

Visiting Wrigley Field on July 20, the Mets wear the road version of their 1986 throwbacks for a single game against the Cubs, who wear their 1986 home set. These gray knit Majestic pullovers feature wide, bold racing stripes up the sides and sleeves, closely resembling the originals.

All lettering is royal-blue/orange, and nameplates correctly appear on the back. The Mets' 25th anniversary patch adorns the left sleeve, just as it did in 1986.

2017-2018 Memorial Day (Road)

The next incarnation of Memorial Day jerseys replaces the previous camo twill pattern with a new style that uses each team's fonts in dark olive green with black outlines. The two similar dark colors are difficult to distinguish, especially at a distance. All player names on back are now single-color black, and the MLB logo on the back collar and team patches are rendered in olive green and black.

A green bar patch with five black stars—representing the five branches of the U.S. military—appears on the right sleeve, and all trim elements are simplified to single-color black. The Mets apply this style to their road gray jerseys as worn on May 27–28, 2017, and May 26–28, 2018 (day game only on May 28). 2017 Independence Day (Home)

The 2017 version of MLB's Independence Day jerseys introduces a new patterned twill, one with a slightly less-busy pattern of stars and the addition of stripes suggesting a waving American flag. Teams again have a choice of two color options for the new twill—appropriately in red/blue or blue/red. The jerseys themselves are again Flex Base with typical manufacturer and set tagging. A ChromaFlex rubberized "stars and stripes" pattern MLB applique patch is sewn on the back of the neck. On July 1–2, 2017, the Mets wear their home white jersey with blue patterned twill/red front logo lettering and front and back numbers. Player names on back are in single-color red. Every jersey has an American flag patch sewn on the right sleeve. Once again, team sleeve patches are embroidered in red, white, and blue.

2017-2018 Players Weekend/2018 Little League Classic

2018 patch

To highlight players' personalities and to appeal to younger fans, MLB introduces the colorful Players Weekend promotion. In addition to relaxed regulations on team standard color and design of cleats, bats, and other equipment, MLB encourages players to wear nicknames on the backs of a new set of very colorful jerseys. Meant to evoke the look of youth league designs, the two-toned Cool Base pullovers feature bright and contrasting body and sleeve colors, and include a patch on the right sleeve with space for players to show their appreciation to special people in their lives with handwritten black marker messages. Both the patch, and the back-of-collar logo, feature a variant of the MLB logo showing the growth of a ballplayer from childhood to adulthood. Heat-pressed Majestic manufacturer and set tags are applied on the front left hem, and the Majestic logo is embroidered on the left sleeve. All numbers on back are in single color Varsity, and the player names in 2 ¾" single color Block Condensed, regardless of the team's usual font. On August 25–27, 2017 and August 24–26, 2018, the Mets wear jerseys with royal blue bodies and orange sleeves with white nicknames and orange numbers on back. Sleeves and V-neck opening are lined with wide orange/white/orange trim. The front features their home jersey script, here rendered in orange/white kiss-cut lightweight twill. The 2018 version has the "Rusty" memorial patch for Rusty Staub on the left chest.

This jersey was also worn on August 19, 2018 for the Little League Classic with this patch on the left sleeve.

2019 Players Weekend

The third incarnation of Players Weekend turns the colorful jersey concept on its head, reducing all teams to monochromatic designs in either black or white. All team sleeve patches and trim are removed, leaving a clean, yet stark template. Gone are the contrasting sleeves and the special patches where players could write messages of inspiration. MLB states that this new approach is meant to emphasize the colorful, personalized cleats, bats, and other gear players choose to wear during the promotion, which spans August 23–25, 2019.

Jerseys are now button-front Flex Base, with appropriate Majestic manufacturer and set tagging. The back-of-collar CFX MLB logo appears in silver and black. All teams also wear a memorial patch for Angels pitcher Tyler Skaggs—a white “45” in a black circle—on the left sleeve. Most teams removed this patch before auctioning off the jerseys.

The Mets wear a white version of their home jersey, with the front lettering and back varsity numbers rendered in white/gray, and the nickname on back in gray.

2021 Alternate Home Black

Stephen Kraljic Collection

The Mets bow to fan pressure and bring back black jerseys for the first time in 10 seasons. They are announced as a “surprise” to debut on July 30 and are worn five times through the end of the season. The new black Nike Flex Base jersey closely mimics the last official iteration of the style. All lettering—front and back—is in royal/white/orange drop shadow in regular twill (rather than the Glacier twill used in the earlier part of this jersey’s original run). The Mets Skyline patch on the left sleeve is the standard version, not the “blackout” version that the original black jersey used for most of its run. All uses of this jersey in 2021 feature the Tom Seaver memorial patch on the right sleeve. The following season, a slightly different version of this jersey—without the Seaver patch and with different trim—becomes an official alternate for the team..

2021 - 20th Anniversary of September 11, 2001

On September 11, 2021, the Mets welcome the crosstown Yankees in a special game to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the September 11, 2001 tragedy. For the occasion, the Mets wear a special Nike Flex Base alternate home jersey that combines the overall look and feel of their “snow white” alternates from 2001—worn on September 21, 2001, the first game back after the attacks. This time, however, the jersey features “NEW YORK” on the front in the Tuscan font of the Mets’ road jerseys, instead of the traditional Mets script.

Royal knit trim encircles the neck and placket and appears above the sleeve ends. Two special additions—the American flag patch on the back of the neck (replacing the MLB logo) and the 9-11-01 and flags embroidery on the right sleeve—echo the jerseys the Mets wore for the remainder of the 2001 season after September 11.

Prototypes and Oddballs

1972 Sample Home?

Offered here is a sample Mets home jersey, identifiable by tell-tale sample tagging in the neck. The Mets switched from flannel to knit for the 1972 season, and it is likely that this was a prototype presented to the team for review in advance of that change. The manufacturer tag in the tail also dates it to this era, though Rawlings used the same tag into the 1980s—long after the Mets had abandoned this style—so that doesn't help narrow the date. However, the jersey exhibits rounded front tail ends, which were a feature of the earlier Mets home knit jerseys, also made by Rawlings, in 1972–1973. That detail helps further narrow the possible time period for this example.

1982-1983 Prototype Orange Batting Practice?

This orange Mets batting practice jersey never appeared in the team's official line-up, so it may have been a prototype from the early 1980s. Rawlings tagging dates it between approximately 1973 and 1984, but the style is most similar to the 1982 and 1983 alternate road batting practice jerseys. Like those examples, this jersey is made of solid fabric rather than mesh. It is possible that this item was a sample for a potential alternate or road BP jersey that was rejected in favor of the more traditional blue versions. It would be 20 years before the Mets introduced an orange BP jersey for on-field use. The gray in the logo and back numbers indicates this would have been a road jersey. A panel of Mets experts believes this was never intended as a prototype of an MLB jersey.

1983 Tom Seaver Acquisition “Press Events” Jersey

Andrew Liput Collection

The Mets changed jersey styles for the 1983 season, but that new style had not yet been introduced when Tom Seaver was reacquired from the Reds in December 1982. He would go on to play one final season for the Mets in 1983 before leaving for the Chicago White Sox in 1984.

A hometown hero, Seaver’s return after more than five years generated widespread excitement and was heavily covered by the New York media. As is customary, a jersey was produced for Seaver to display and wear at these events. While I do not specialize in photo-matching, images from his press conference, team PR photos on Getty Images, and the May–June issue of New York Sports magazine (bottom right) clearly show Seaver holding and wearing the jersey in review, without question.

1985-1987 Powder Blue Oddball

Mets historian and frequent contributor Michael Cesarano shares an unusual Rawlings Mets jersey he purchased on eBay in 2009 for under $20. The Rawlings collar tag—featuring four small lines of text beneath the logo—was used from 1985 to 1987. Michael notes that the back is blank, and the layered twill front logo is heat-pressed onto the jersey without any stitched edging.

Michael notes:

"Its collar stitching is very unusual for a baseball jersey. NY chest logo is pressed on but not stitched, as if the jersey was not finished.

There is a plastic piece of what looks like a retail tag going through the collar; why would this be present on a prototype jersey that was presumably never available for retail sale? Since the jersey is likely from a time when authentic jerseys were not so widely available to consumers it is possible that this is some kind of prototype that was considered. However, at present we have no concrete evidence that the Mets ever considered or were even shown this jersey, which is why I had not thought to show this to you previously."

1986 All-Star Game Jerseys Without Nameplates

Held in the Houston Astrodome, the 1986 MLB All-Star Game featured no fewer than five Mets: Gary Carter, Sid Fernandez, Dwight Gooden, Keith Hernandez, and Darryl Strawberry. And beginning the Mets' All-Star Game jersey shenanigans that would continue in 1988 (see several pages ahead), the five Mets took the field in a look ever-so-slightly different than the rest of the season.

All five Mets appeared in their standard home pinstriped pullovers with two-color lettering throughout. But none of them had nameplates on back, leaving their names to clash with the jersey stripes for one night only.

Many teams make special uniforms for their players to wear at an All-Star Game, and some even sewn on special tags to commemorate the honor for their selected players. We have not seen one of these Mets jerseys appear in the hobby, so aside from the nameplate, we do not know if there were any such tributes. But we do know that if these jerseys were to come up for sale, a discerning collector might pass on them, citing the lack of the characteristic nameplate. Proving, once again, there are never any absolutes when it comes to MLB jerseys—especially for those made decades ago.

1987 Prototype Road Batting Practice

This is most likely a prototype jersey produced by Rawlings to demonstrate how a new design would look in real life. Note that this Rawlings mesh batting jersey uses three-color twill on all lettering and numbers, unlike the two-color lettering used in 1987. It is pro-tagged by Rawlings as “Set 2 1987”, but the jersey appears unused. None of the team-used, two-color-lettered jerseys I’ve seen have a year or set tag sewn in like this one does. The tag is sewn inside the front tail. This three-color scheme was indeed adopted and used on all road batting practice jerseys in 1988—but with a different team wordmark design. A nearly identical jersey was used for the Mets’ road batting practice jersey in 1994 (pictured several pages back).

1987 Keith Hernandez Captain's "C"

Captain's patches are more commonly seen on hockey and football jerseys in U.S. sports, but there have been instances where baseball players have worn them as well.

According to a story in Newsday, Keith Hernandez—named the Mets' first-ever captain in 1987—found the captain's "C" attached to his jersey the following day. He said he liked the "C" because it was "an ego thing," but felt it was too large on the jersey. The following year, when Gary Carter was also named a co-captain and did not want to wear the "C," Hernandez asked to have his removed.

1988 All-Star Game Batting Practice

The page covering this jersey has changed with each edition of this guide. I think we now finally have the full story. For the 1987–1992 seasons the Mets wore a BP jersey like this, but with the wide ”racing stripes” sewn in only on top of the sleeves, NOT on the sides like this one. Some player photos and baseball cards found during research had convinced me that this particular style had been worn by the MLB Mets in the 1987 season, which was disputed by Mets collectors (see a page from earlier editions of this Guide, bottom left). Subsequently, photos of a jersey claimed to be a Gary Carter All-Star jersey in this style appeared, and we dismissed it as a fake. But since then, a few more photos of the 1988 All-Star Game have surfaced, and lo and behold, we have photo evidence of David Cone wearing this very jersey in pregame activities. Tagging indicates that these jerseys were issued specifically for this game.

Confusing things is the fact that the Mets’ Port St. Lucie minor league team wore this same style jersey for multiple years (baseball card, near left). The minor league version has the Rawlings logo glued to the left sleeve end as seen on the older book page. The All-Star jerseys seem to have no Rawlings sleeve logos at all. There were four Mets on that 1988 All-Star roster, and we have accounted for two of their jerseys here.

1989 Prototype Road

This Rawlings road gray button-front jersey with 1989 tagging may have been a prototype—though it is certainly an oddball. By 1987, the Mets were leaning heavily into tight V-neck pullovers and bold, wide racing stripes. Meanwhile, this jersey mimics the look of the team's earliest 1962 road uniforms and lacks even basic trim at the placket or sleeve ends.

It seems an odd choice to have been produced "in the cloth" for team review. Furthermore, selecting Kevin Elster—who had just completed his first full season in 1988, hitting an unspectacular .214 in 149 games—seems like a peculiar decision.

1992-1993 Prototype Charcoal

Made of solid game-weight fabric, this dark-charcoal gray jersey features a gray Russell "R" embroidered on the right sleeve end. The Russell locker tag is the 1992–1993 style. Keep in mind that in 1992, Russell was about to be named the official supplier of MLB game jerseys—though teams could remain with other manufacturers if they had a preference or an existing contract.

The wordmark style used here is the same one that appeared on the 1993 and 1994 game road jerseys and road BP jerseys, but in two colors only. This design adds a third gray (or possibly white) outline to the lettering. Ultimately, the Mets did switch to Russell for 1993—but without adopting a charcoal-colored alternate jersey.

Below: The team's actual 1993 road and 1993 road batting practice jerseys, as worn during that season.

1995 Prototype Orange?

This orange Mets jersey appeared on eBay listed as a “Bobby Jones Spring Training Jersey.” The Russell tagging dates it to approximately 1993–1995. In 1993–1994, the Mets used a front wordmark with an underscore. In 1995, they switched to AIS for most of their jerseys, although Russell still produced some home versions.

It’s possible this was a sample alternate jersey created by Russell when the Mets reverted to a non-underlined wordmark in 1995. The blue/orange/white lettering closely resembles that of the AIS-made road jerseys from that season. Still, the presence of a neck tag is atypical for a team-issued jersey, even a prototype. More research is required.

At left, the Russell tail tag identifies this as a 1992–1993 creation. The sleeve stripes, which incorporate road gray, represent a design element that was ultimately not used.

At right is an interesting batting practice jersey, believed to be a prototype produced by AIS for team consideration in 1996 or 1997. We can narrow the date to these years because the Mets' "Skyline" patch on the sleeve is pre-1998, and Bobby Valentine was named manager in 1996. AIS made its first Mets on-field uniform in 1996. Note the football-jersey-style sleeve trim, featuring white, orange, and silver. The team script and player number are sewn in three-layer tackle twill (blue/orange/white). The player name is in one-color (white) twill.

2001-2004 John Franco Captain's "C"

Captain's patches are more commonly seen on hockey and football jerseys in U.S. sports, though they have occasionally been worn in baseball as well.

Pitcher John Franco was named a Mets captain in 2001, a designation he held through his final season with the team in 2004. During those years, most of his jerseys—including BP jerseys—featured the captain's "C" on the left chest. The letter was styled to match the color pattern of each jersey.

Home, home alternate, and BP jerseys featuring the script "Mets" used a block-style "C." In contrast, the road and road alternate jerseys with "New York" on the front used a Tuscan-style "C" to match the lettering.

2004 Bob Murphy Memorial Patch V1.0

More here: https://metspolice.com/2014/05/08/memorial-patches-embroidery-ralph-kiner-bob-murphy/

For the 2004 season, the Mets were awash in patches. In addition to the usual "Skyline" patch on the left sleeve, the team planned to wear a large and colorful Shea Stadium 40th Anniversary patch on the right sleeve. But when former Met and fan favorite Tug McGraw died on January 4, 2004, the team decided to add a small, directly embroidered memorial inscription to the right sleeve below the Shea patch. Then, on August 3, 2004, recently retired Mets broadcaster Bob Murphy died, and the team wanted to memorialize him as well. At that point, things were getting crowded on the right sleeve.

While we have documented the eventual final result of the Murphy memorial elsewhere in this chapter, it appears that there was an earlier version that was actually embroidered on the jerseys of several players, above the Shea patch on the right sleeve. It said "Murphy" in large letters with the direct embroidery of a microphone below it. After review, the team appears to have abandoned this design and instead placed "BOB MURPHY" arched above the Skyline patch on the left sleeve.

Rather than discard the jerseys with the improper embroidery, the team simply covered it with a jersey-colored piece of twill. After all, it was nearing the end of the season—and who would notice?

Collector Steve Kraljic has one of these "beta" black jerseys and has shared photos with us, issued to Jason Phillips. "Stitches" of Whitestone, NY, the Mets' local stitching shop, was responsible for the direct embroidery. Mets expert Nick DiSalvo reports that several other such jerseys exist, including examples issued to pitchers Al Leiter and John Franco.

2005 Pedro Martinez Sleeve Alterations

Hall of Famer Pedro Martinez was a long, lanky pitcher who generated significant velocity despite his smaller frame. Though lean-limbed, he opted for comfort through special jersey tailoring.

In his Red Sox days, he and other players (like Manny Ramirez) first accomplished this by ripping open the sleeve seam, leaving it to hang open. Apparently, MLB frowned upon this type of modification. Soon after, during his time in Boston and continuing into his Mets tenure, Martinez's jerseys were specially tailored with extra material—often mesh—sewn into the sleeves to provide more room and eliminate the loose ends.

The image here, and the notes of the accompanying Letters of Opinion linked below, detail this special request.

Letter of Professional Opinion

Pedro Martinez 2005 New York Mets Home Game Worn Jersey

Examination Date: June 1, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0003101

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2005-tagged New York Mets #45 Pedro Martinez Majestic six-button full-weight knit size 46 white jersey with Royal blue engineered piercings. The Mets script wordmark is sewn arched across the chest in glacier-pattered blue tackle twill outlined with non-glacier orange and then a non-glacier black drop shadow. Extra Velcro closure beneath the wordmark. The three-color player number "45" is sewn on the placket and 1/2" from the sleeve hem. Opaque name and number are sewn to the back, again in the same twill pattern as the front. The Mets "skyline" patch is sewn to the left sleeve in the style incorporating the barely visible black drop shadow around the Mets script. Experts know that Martinez specified his pitching game-day Mets uniforms custom-made with mesh sleeve inserts, or else he sliced the bottoms of the sleeves open. This example has white mesh inserts sewn into the seams.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitching is original and unaltered. The cut and tailoring tagging is curled and shows signs of fact-a-tor washing. The inside seam tagging shows wear that is consistent with multiple use. The Mets had five different uniform choices to wear in these years, and likely at least two sets of each kind. Therefore it is reasonable to conclude that any single style of jersey may have been worn by a player in fewer than a dozen games. The jersey is splashed with dirt that has caused blotches of dark staining on the tails, both front and back.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged and lettered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Pedro Martinez of the New York Mets in the 2005 season.

Pedro Martinez 2006 New York Mets Road Jersey

Examination Date: January 21, 2021 Certification Number: 21-0003101R

This letter will serve as the professional opinion of William Henderson regarding the item in review.

Description: 2006-tagged New York Mets #45 Pedro Martinez Majestic six-button full-weight knit size 46 gray jersey. The Mets "New York" road wordmark is sewn arched across the chest in glacier-pattered blue tackle twill outlined with non-glacier orange and then a non-glacier black drop shadow. Extra Velcro closure beneath the wordmark. Royal blue sashacks is sewn on the placket and 1/2" from the sleeve hem. The three-color player number "45" is sewn on the placket and 1/2" from the sleeve hem. Opaque name and number are sewn to the back, again in the same twill pattern as the front. The Mets "skyline" patch is sewn to the left sleeve in the style incorporating the black drop shadow around the Mets script. The player has autographed the 5 on the back with his name and number in black ink. The Mets "Jackie" patch is sewn to the right sleeve in the style with the black drop shadow around the Mets script. Experts know that Martinez specified his pitching game-day Mets uniforms custom-made with mesh sleeve inserts, or else he sliced the bottoms of the sleeves open. This example has neither. Photo evidence on Getty Images suggests that this might not be an indepatable rule (see image 1510792 which appears to have neither alteration) but we mention it here because it is significant to Martinez collectors.

Wear & Repairs: A light table examination shows that all stitching is original and unaltered. The inside seam tagging shows major fraying and fading from wash wear that is consistent with a season of use; the Mets had five different uniform choices to wear in these years, and likely at least two sets of each kind. Therefore it is reasonable to conclude that any single style of jersey may have been worn by a player in fewer than a dozen games. The jersey is dirty, splashed with something that has caused blotches of dark staining on the front and especially on the tails both front and back.

Conclusion: The jersey in review is properly tagged, lettered, and unaltered. It is consistent with known exemplars. It exhibits use and wash wear. Therefore, it is my considered opinion that this jersey is genuine and was worn by Pedro Martinez in the 2006 season.

2009 Uniform Survey and Prototype?

In May 2009, the Mets sent out a uniform survey to fans to gauge interest in potential changes to their set of jerseys (along with a handful of other questions). Some of the options ranged from the mundane to the....well, absurd. The examples from the survey are shown here, with numbering added for easier reference.

The team did make changes to their uniforms in the years following the survey, which included updates similar to the options here. The home jersey changed from white to cream in 2010, mirroring he 4B option. The team removed all drop shadows in 2012, so none of the other versions shown here became reality in exactly the same form, but 2013 brought new blue home and road jerseys, similar to what was previewed in 7A and 7B.

Surveys with design mock-ups are one thing, but an oddball jersey up for sale many years ago (made even more odd by the presence of retail tags) looks like the combination of a standard home jersey and a color-blocked jersey with several neck and underarm inserts similar to 5A. It is impossible to know if this strange, singular jersey (shown top right) is related to the survey, but the weird color-block pattern is a curious coincidence. More research is required, and any reader input is welcome!

Which is the "Official" Skyline Patch?

- All three of these Skyline patch variants were found on authentic Mets jerseys in 2010–2011 and appear to have been used interchangeably.
- The most obvious differences include the shape, location, and number of "stitches" on the ball; the shape of the "M"; the spacing between the "t" and the "s"; and the profile of the buildings in the background. All three patches differ in these details.

2012 Unused Prototype Orange "Los Mets"

Jersey selection as used in 2013

This jersey design was considered as a finalist for use as a Mets Hispanic heritage jersey for 2012, and ultimately was not selected. Note the tail tagging by Majestic that codes it in case the Mets had decided to go ahead with it. The team finally decided on a blue jersey for 2012 with this same script. But the effort was not for naught, because the 2013 Los Mets jersey used this same design, albeit with different sleeve patches (inset).

Oddball Retail Authentic Jerseys - End of Run, 2015

Barely worth a footnote, as the Mets discontinued the snow white, cream-colored pinstriped and black jerseys after the 2015 season, Majestic released a final run of retail (6300 tag code) jerseys in all three styles with the Mr. Met patch on the right sleeve. The team never wore this patch on any of these jerseys on the field. Why did Majestic do this? Who knows. Perhaps they had a bunch of extra patches to get rid of, too.

2023 Prototype Home

Soon after Nike took over MLB jersey manufacturing in 2020, they had intended to release their Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template as early as 2022. However, a source told Uni-Watch in 2022 that the plans were "pushed back at least to 2023, and possibly even 2024." Ultimately, the new template was in fact delayed to 2024, but here we have evidence that prototypes were made up in advance of the 2023 season, if not earlier.

This Mets home jersey is stark and shocking in its plainness, almost akin to the team's "Snow White" alternates of years before. However, the Mets last used a pinstripe-free home jersey in 2014, so either Nike did not have the proper striped fabric available for the sample, or the team was considering a change. Many of the 2023 samples had very odd elements (see the road version on the next page) so it is likely it was the former reason rather than the latter.

Given how plain the jersey is, it is hard to tell it is VPE, but close inspection reveals the lower MLB logo on back, the band of fabric around the neck opening, a lightweight sleeve patch, and perforated back numbers. The tell-tale "Player" and "23" on back reinforce this as a sample, intended for the 2023 season. Oddly, the player name is not small and harshly arched like VPE, instead, it mirrors the team's back lettering before the switch. Perhaps, like the Royals, the Mets considered keeping their full-size name-on-back lettering at one point, and were "talked out of it" by Nike.

The heat-pressed inventory tag also reveals some info, and leaves us with some mysteries. It reads "DH0766 NME 2023 HOME CONVERSION JERSEY P1." There is also a small, handwritten "1" on the bottom corner of the tag. Here, "NME" is a code Nike has used elsewhere for the Mets, and "2023" and "HOME" are self explanatory. The "DH0766" indication is not clear, although Nike has used a "DX" prefix for four-digit style numbers in its Vapor Premier Elite line for colleges, so this may be an internal model number for the pro jerseys. The use of "Conversion Jersey" and "P1" is also unclear, unless it refers to converting from the Flex Base template to this one, and this is a second iteration of a sample.

2023 Prototype Road

RGVDEAL on eBay

Here's a "brother" sample to the home version on the previous page, but where that one was strikingly minimalist, this one is over-the-top. Soon after Nike took over MLB jersey manufacturing in 2020, they had intended to release their Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) template as early as 2022. However, a source told Uni-Watch in 2022 that the plans were "pushed back at least to 2023, and possibly even 2024." Ultimately, the new template was in fact delayed to 2024, but here we have evidence that prototypes were made up in advance of the 2023 season, if not earlier.

This Mets road jersey, to an casual fan, is mostly the same as what they wore before and after the switch from Nike's version of Flex Base to VPE. Closer inspection reveals that the template is VPE - including the lower MLB logo on back, smaller player name lettering, the band of fabric around the neck opening, sewn-in sleeve-end trim, a lightweight sleeve patch, and perforated back numbers. (The road jerseys ultimately did not use perforated numbers.) The tell-tale "Player" and "23" on back reinforce this as a sample, intended for the 2023 season.

Oddly, the sleeve-end trim appears in colors that the Mets did not wear before or since, royal blue/white. It looks more like something the Royals would use.

Meanwhile, the sewn-in neck opening trim and the knit trim around the neck and down the placket are gray. That's an odd choice for a gray jersey, but even more strange is that the two bands, perhaps at the sample stage, this was all that was available, or perhaps the team was considering some change it vetoed based on the features of the new template.

The heat-pressed inventory tag also reveals some info, and leaves us with some mysteries. It reads "DH0771 NME 2023 CONV. JERSEY ROAD P2." There is also a small, handwritten "2" on the bottom corner of the tag. Here, "NME" is a code Nike has used elsewhere for the Mets, and "2023" and "ROAD" are self explanatory. The "DH0771" indication is not clear, although Nike has used a "DX" prefix for four-digit style numbers in its Vapor Premier Elite line for colleges, so this may be an internal model number for the pro jerseys. The use of "Conv. Jersey" and "P2" is also unclear, unless it refers to converting from the Flex Base template to this one, and this is a second iteration of a sample.

2024 Prototype Home/Road

RGVDEAL on eBay

In advance of the switch to Nike Vapor Premier Elite (VPE) in the 2024 season, Nike made prototypes of jerseys on the new template for team review. By the point that these samples were made, teams had already seen some early drafts with many missing or incorrect details, just to get a sense of the materials and construction. However, many of the later samples, like the ones shown here, were very close to what eventually appeared on the field in 2024. These Mets home and road versions are examples. In many ways they replicate the team's home and road jerseys that they had worn for years, just carried over to VPE. This meant that the original sleeve-end trim was now sewn into the edge of the sleeve instead of on it, player names and numbers are smaller with names more arched, and back numbers are perforated (which was not an element of the team's final, on-field home and road jerseys for 2024).

RGVDEAL on eBay

Note the sample information that is on the Nike tags, which read "METS HOME JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT" and METS ROAD JERSEY 44 REGULAR FIT" with 44 being the size, atypical of earlier Nike samples, which were usually size 46. Also, the designation of "regular fit" was something not commonly seen on jersey tags, so it may have indicated the intent to use "bucket sizing" on jerseys, where there were a handful of standard cuts in different proportions available to players rather than the specific customizations of years past. Nike's 2024 pants were also done in bucket sizing, which was very unpopular with players. It is unclear what the text "DH0766-100" and "DH0771-074" on the front tags mean. They are likely internal production codes, as all 2024 samples we have seen have different codes in these spots that we have not yet deciphered.

Meet "MR. MET"

"Mr. Met", whom you see in various poses on this page and who appears on the front cover of the yearbook in four colors, was conceived almost two years ago. However, it was many months and hundreds of drawings later before the mascot of the club saw the light of day and finally became a reality.

Like a new baby "Mr. Met" must learn to crawl before he can walk and run. As this season progresses and in the years ahead, "Mr. Met" will appear in hundreds of different poses and will be an integral part of our new scoreboard at Shea Stadium. There will be all types of "Mr. Met" merchandise, some of which will be available here at the ball park; many other items will be sold in department and variety stores.

We hope that you will adopt "Mr. Met" as one of your own children and treat him just as kindly. We believe "Mr. Met" will reflect the spirit of the club. Presently "Mr. Met" is appearing at the opening of all New York Met television broadcasts where he will be acting out the chorus of the official Met song, "Meet the Mets." Be sure to look for "Mr. Met" in thousands of stores in this area and in hundreds of different situations. We hope you'll like him and will have fun with him. We know he'll like you.

"MR. MET"
